Mr. Price proceeds, criticising the statement that the board held $70,000 "in marketable securities," and expresses surprise that the Methodist church should engage in stock jobbing. He also overhauls the expense accounts, which to the extent of $21,556 are to be met before any money can be used for legitimate church work. In closing he accuses the church agents of making false representations to secure contributions. He demands an explanation of the board's methods, and urges that all dishonest and oblique procedures be at once stopped.

At the Grave.

Died, at Minneapolis, Kan., Sept. 27, 1885, Warren, son of Warren and Ella Reed, aged 1 year, 5 months, and 8 days. The following tribute, at the grave, from the parents, was the entire ceremony. No prayers were offered, no songs were rendered. "Friends: We bury here the remains of our once lovely, loving boy. To us he was the sunshine of happiness; an emblem of innocence, purity, love, and joy. In the eve of infancy, he was dawning into the morn of childhood, bringing with him the ideal of our hope and pride. To us he was an offspring of love, a fruit of happiness, a treasure of joy. Nature kindly touched him into a joyous gem; she kissed him into a shining light, then unkindly smote him with the wand of death. The casket we deposit here; the gem of light has flown we know not whither, but if there is life beyond the grave, we hope to meet our little darling when we are ushered thither."

Sabbatic Trouble Among the Jews.

From the Hebrew Standard.

Our rabbis "hav eyes but they will not see" that their efforts to bring about a revival of the old spirit of Judaism are simply wasted because misdirected. Of the thousands of Sabbath-breakers in New York city, we venture to assert that not one-tenth part hav been interested in the Kohut-Kohler controversy, or understand the difference between Mosaic-Rabbinical and Prophetic Judaism. The addresses of our eloquent divines at the Baltimore conference were doubtless very interesting, the proposed publication of catechisms and Jewish books very laudable, but the fact, the stubborn fact, still stares us in the face, a fact disgraceful to orthodox and reform alike—that Jewish places of business are open on the Jewish Sabbath, and that the number is constantly increasing.

And our rabbis still fiddle, while disintegration and destruction are perceptible everywhere. They may preach upon the subject of Sabbath desecration, but they preach to empty pews and an array of empty benches.

Catechisms and conferences hav no more effect upon the disease under which we are laboring than so many bread pills.

Nature might hav worked a recovery had Judaism been left alone, but the "doctors" hav so drenched us with their quack nostrums that their nauseating effects hav produced an apathy and a stupor from which it seems almost impossible to awake.

Unless they are interested in keeping us at the point of death, our learned doctors can if they wish speedily bring about a recovery.

Let them organize themselvs into a religious sanitary corps, and personally visit the infected portion of the city. Let Dr. Gottheil visit our Jewish bankers and brokers in Wall street, and tell them how Jewish financiers became eminent and amassed wealth and still kept their Sabbath. Let Drs. Mendes and Jacobs buttonhole the wholesale clothiers and Dr. Kohut smoke out the cigar merchants, and personally urge them to abandon their evil ways.

As for Dr. Kohler, he can stay at home, for his persuasiv eloquence would only urge them to continue their sacrifice to the Yhvh Moloch of trade, so that they might recognize the Sunday Sabbath, to the observance of which he leans very much. If twenty or thirty wholesale merchants and bankers would close their business on Saturday the rest would follow, and our New York rabbis could then number them among their Sabbath audiences.

MOST OF THE JEWS OF NEW YORK ARE INFIDELS.

From the Sun.

Saturday is the great day in Wall street where the Jews especially congregate, and in all business it is the principal day. Then steamers sail, the shipments of merchandise are heaviest, the exchanges are most activ, and the Hebrew merchant or broker is most needed at his desk on Saturday.

The consequence is that a great part of the Jews of New York, already weakened in their religious faith, hav more and more abandoned the synagog, and paid less and less attention to the requirements of their religion. They are out-and-out Infidels, and carry their skepticism further than recreant Christians are apt to do. All days are alike to them, and Judaism and Christianity are both childish superstitions in their eyes.

"To improve the race is a slow and laborious work; there is no short cut to perfection. Little by little is it done. Work and wait."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - NOVEMBER 28, 1885.

Shall We Hav Pictures?

Since we asked the question, "Shall THE TRUTH SEEKER be illustrated?" many favorable replies hav come in, and considerable substantial aid is promised. We print a few of the letters this week in the "Letters from Friends." It will be noticed that two or three varying suggestions are also made. To these we can only say that probably every subscriber could suggest a different plan, and probably nine-tenths might be good plans. But we would be utterly unable to carry any of them out. The idea we hav in mind as being the most practical is to print each week a first-page picture like "The Modern Balaam," with several others about half the size on different pages. The pictures shall be well done, upon live religious issues as well as upon Old and New Testament topics familiar to all. As fast as we hav the means we can improve upon this plan.

In addition to encouraging letters, we hav been promised pecuniary aid. Mr. John Desmond, of Chicago, says he will giv one hundred dollars per year toward the project, and Mr. Frank Smead, of the same city, thinks he can do as much. Another friend promises five dollars.

This is good, and we shall certainly try to deserve well of such generous friends. No doubt there are many more equally as kindly disposed toward the project of an illustrated paper, but are without the means to help as much. They can, however, aid effectually, if so disposed, by getting new subscribers. Indeed, this last is the best, for the help of new subscribers will be solid and permanent, and insure a continuance of the illustrating, which donations now and then would not, because when the gifts were expended there would be an emptiness in the cash-drawer fatal to the artists' skill. But let every one of our present readers secure a new subscriber when sending his own remittance, and the pictures will come to stay.

Every dollar that comes into the TRUTH SEEKER office is spent on THE TRUTH SEEKER and books. We believe that pictures will induce people to read the paper who do not now read it, and will therefore do good. We hope that everyone in favor of the illustrations will take a little pains to get new subscribers. We will renew the subscription of an old subscriber and send one year to a new subscriber for $5. Let us hear promptly from the friends, as we wish to inaugurate the new departure with the first number of the new year.

An Illegal Act.

In last week's TRUTH SEEKER one of our contributors had a good poem showing the absurdity of "Thanksgiving;" in this issue Col. John R. Kelso has a ringing open letter to Grover Cleveland, president of the United States by the suffrages of the people and not by grace of any particular god.

There is one point, however, which Mr. Kelso fails to bear down upon; that is the illegality of attaching the seal of the United States to a religious document. He points out the unconstitutionality of the president's issuing such a proclamation, but another point is that in attaching the seal of state to the document the president has committed an illegal act.

The constitutions of the various states giv the governors power to appoint holidays. The president has no such power. The governors can appoint any day they please, and the day so selected is a legal holiday, with the exemptions of business customary on holidays. The most that the president can legally do is to suggest to the governors that they all select the same day. This he should do, if done at all, by writing to the governors. His proclamation to the people is null and void—he cannot create a religious holiday. To attach the seal of the United States to a private document is illegal—as much so to Mr. Cleveland's suggestion to various governors as it would be to a document of his law-partner, Mr. Bissell, of Buffalo.

Mr. Cleveland's civil service reform might appropriately begin in this very matter of Thanksgiving proclamations, and very close to the White House.

Elizur Wright Dead.

Elizur Wright died last Sunday, Nov. 22d, at his home in Malden, Mass., of paralysis, aged eighty-one years.

This sudden loss of him who was justly called the Nestor of American Liberalism will be learned with grief by the Freethinkers, not only of this country, but England as well, for he was widely known among the Secularists of the mother country. Only a little over two months ago he attended the New York State Freethinkers' Association Convention, and read a long essay upon Bible revision. He was then apparently in remarkably good health for a man of fourscore, and his hundreds of friends went away from that convention expecting to see him at the next.

Mr. Wright was born in South Canaan, Conn., on Feb. 12, 1804. He was graduated at Yale College in 1826, and for two years was a teacher in Groton, Mass. From 1829 to 1833 he was professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in Western Reserve College, Hudson, Ohio. In 1833 he came to New York, and was for five years secretary of the American Antislavery Society, editing, in 1834–5, a paper called Human Rights, and in 1834–8 the Quarterly Antislavery Magazine. He went to Boston in 1838, and in April, 1839, became editor of the Massachusetts Abolitionist. In 1846 he established the Chronotype, which he conducted until it was merged in the Commonwealth in 1850, of which he was also for a time the editor. From 1858 to 1866 he was insurance commissioner of Massachusetts, and has since been prominently connected with insurance interests. Mr. Wright published, in 1841, a translation in verse of La Fontaine's "Fables," a work entitled "A Curiosity of Law," in 1866, and many pamphlets and reports. The part taken by Mr. Wright in the antislavery contest was conspicuously heroic, and the black race of America owes to but few men more than to him. After the abrogation of slavery, Mr. Wright devoted himself largely to the discussion of Freethought, and was one of the chief supporters of the Boston Index until the course of Mr. Abbot toward the founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER alienated him from that journal. In the discussion over the Comstock law, during the three years following D. M. Bennett's persecution by the notorious Comstock in the interest of the Christian church, Mr. Wright's clear thinking led him to espouse the side of the so-called repeal party; and during the years he was president of the National Liberal League he never ceased to talk and write for the repeal of the unconstitutional law under which so much injustice has been perpetrated. And since he resigned the presidency of the League he has been activly opposed to the doings of the clerical spy engaged by Samuel Colgate's society. Three weeks ago he was chosen president of the National Defense Association, a society whose object is the rescuing from the clutches of Comstock such innocent people as that individual may entrap for his own glory.

Mr. Wright was also one of the foremost members of the American Forestry Commission, and last year traveled over several states in the interests of that society. He led the local movement for the preservation for public uses of the rocky wooded tract of land between Malden and Stoneham, known as the Middlesex Falls. In his business as actuary he stood at the head of the profession, being recognized as an authority in all life insurance matters.

Through the glorious years of that party, Mr. Wright was an ardent Republican, having been, as editor of the Chronotype, almost its founder. He advocated the abolition of slavery by political means, disagreeing with Garrison and his friends. The four years' civil war showed the wisdom of his views.

The Freethinkers of America owe much to Elizur Wright for his bold, clear, and logical advocacy of their views. Though not a brilliant orator, no man excelled him in forcible writing. Especially does THE TRUTH SEEKER owe him a large debt of honor and gratitude for his many acts of noble friendship to its founder. The tens of thousands of friends of Thomas Paine are also indebted to him for his kind exertions to save the Paine Memorial Building in Boston for its purpose. When the depreciation of property which occurred a few years ago had endangered that noble structure, his advice and open purse enabled Mr. Mendum to hold the hall until it could be freed from debt and owned by the admirers of Paine.

Mr. Wright was plain and unassuming, generous almost beyond his means. Though hated by the Christians, and regarded as a conspirator by the pro-slavery people, no mean act was ever charged upon him, so blameless was his life. He leaves a family, and to them we offer sincerest sympathy. As children and relativs they sustain a sad loss; as citizens of the republic they lose one of their country's best friends.

The Sunday Opening of the Museums.

If the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art carry out their promises to Mr. Beekman, president of the Park commissioners, that when they found out that the public really desired that the museums' doors should be unlocked on Sundays they would open them, there is every prospect that the workingmen and others of New York who can visit Central Park only on Sundays will be able to enter the museums that day.

The petition being circulated by the American Secular Union has shown that the very element—the laborers—that the museum trustees said did not care whether the institution was open or not, do care. One petition circulated in a labor meeting was, with two exceptions, signed by the entire audience. A portion of the church people are also in favor of the movement—the Episcopalians and the Catholics. The latter, however, do not want the doors opened before twelve o'clock, as the priests wish to force their parishioners to spend Sunday morning in devotion. The Episcopalians, Ingersoll says, with a few more rites would be Catholics; with a few less, nothing. Episcopalianism is generally regarded as a very worldly religion. The principal opposers of the movement are the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists. Undoubtedly the leading men of these sects will use all the influence they possess with the trustees of the museums, and it will require a strong showing on the part of the public to overcome their malevolent interference. The petitions should therefore be unceasingly circulated. One hundred thousand names ought to be obtained within the next week.

The daily press is almost unanimously in favor of the people in this matter. In printing a page of opinions of eminent men on the subject, the New York Herald of Sunday, November 15th, said:

"The strong array of weighty names of persons in favor of opening the museums and libraries on Sunday which the Herald prints to-day should attract general attention. The subject is one that interests every house-holder, every tax-payer, every official, every citizen. There is no person living in New York who would not be immeasurably benefited by the free opening of our museums and libraries to the public. For it is not only to the advantage of those who avail themselvs of the privilege, but the general tone of society would feel its benign influence, the cause of temperance would be advanced, there would be less work for the police, and the laboring class in particular would largely benefit by such an improvement in their opportunities for education and culture.

"It is not remarkable that the many ways in which such action as the Herald advocates in regard to free access to our museums and libraries on Sundays should appeal with great force to our manufacturers, our merchants, and those who hav charge of the preservation of the public peace. It is to such as these that the welfare of the city is most important, and their words of appreciation of the value of this movement are strong evidence of its wisdom and justice."

The Times of November 18th said:

"Many thousand copies of a petition requesting the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the American Museum of Natural History to open, free of charge, to the public these institutions on Sunday are being circulated in various parts of the city. The petitions were prepared by S. P. Putnam, to whom, when filled with signatures, they will be returned, at No. 33 Clinton Place. 'I feel very much encouraged over our work,' said Mr. Putnam, 'for the indications are that half a hundred thousand persons will join in our request.' When the petitions are all signed they will be turned over to Park Commissioner Beekman, who will present them to the trustees of the museums for action.

"The agitation for the opening of museums and libraries on Sundays is carried on with a persistence that of itself proves how important many intelligent people consider it. That fa-vorit argument of inert conservatism, 'the entering wedge,' can scarcely now be urged against the proposition. The force of this argument was exhausted in this city last year when the Park commissioners added music to the attractions of the Central Park on Sunday. A logical adherence to the practical motiv of the opposition to the opening of public institutions on Sunday would require the closing of the Park itself on that day, for the contention of the rigid Sabbatarians is that people should spend Sunday 'at home or at church.' To those who know what the allurements of New York tenement houses are the advice to people who are doomed to inhabit them to spend their Sundays 'at home' seems a piece of ghastly satire. Nevertheless, this employment of the day is prescribed by people who hav comfortable homes to people whose homes are merely shelters. The mere contemplation of such of the beauties of nature as are to be seen in the parks does not, as it has been demonstrated, altogether satisfy the people who most need recreation on Sundays. They require to hav 'something going on.' In a word, they need amusement, and if they do not get it in innocent forms they will take it in vicious forms. This was the craving the Park commissioners met when they supplied music in the Central Park on Sunday. The result was a complete and triumphant vindication of their action. The Park became a more popular resort than it had ever become before. The greatest throngs it had gathered dwindled into insignificance by comparison with the enormous numbers of people who were attracted to it by the announcement of the music."

The Daily News of the same date reported:

"On Friday last copies of a petition were distributed for signatures, asking the trustees of the Museum of Art and the American Museum of Natural History to open those institutions on Sunday. Mr. S. P. Putnam, who took charge of the distribution of the petitions and to whom they will be returned at his office, 33 Clinton place, reports that so far only two of the petitions hav been returned to him, one bearing over 200 and the other over 300 names, all of which were obtained in two societies and were subscribed as fast as the men could write. Mr. Putnam thinks he will collect, without difficulty, a surprising array of names of people who favor the Sunday opening of the museums. Some of those who hav placed articles in the museums for exhibition hav threatened to withdraw them in case the museums are thrown open on Sunday, and to all such the answer is made that articles not fit to be seen on Sunday are not fit to be seen on week-days."

The same day the Evening Post expressed the opinion that:

"The Museum will be worth five times as much as it is now as a civilizing agency if open on Sunday; and there are five persons willing to contribute to whatever helps to refine and elevate the mass of the people for the one who is willing to help the well-to-do to gratify their curiosity or cultivate their taste."

On the 20th the World came into line:

"The World has constantly advocated the provision of Sunday amusements for the people. We believe in them for more than one reason. Sunday is the only day on which hundreds of thousands of our citizens hav an opportunity to enjoy recreation of any description. We are not in favor of making their only holiday in a week of toil a day of gloom and sadness, without sunshine or brightness.

"The idle and even the vicious are made better by finding unobjectionable amusements at their command on Sunday. If a bad man can be induced to go among respectable and orderly people, he generally behaves himself. It is from idleness and when driven among vicious companions that weak men are tempted to evil. Hence it is an advantage to society to afford the people all the proper recreation possible on that day of the week when their time is their own, to employ as they see fit or as opportunity offers.

"The opposition made to the opening of the museums on Sundays is unjust as well as unwise. The public museums are the property of the people, and it is not fair that those should be excluded from them who hav no opportunity of visiting them except on Sunday. They are places of instruction as well of amusement, and certainly an orderly company of visitors to such institutions cannot be regarded as a desecration of Sunday. The objection made that people must be employed on Sundays to attend the doors and watch the buildings is not valid, as the churches themselves are compelled to keep a certain number of persons employed on Sunday even during the services.

"The Sabbatarians are honest, but they are mistaken. People are made more contented, more cheerful, better citizens in every way when they can enjoy their only holiday in the week as a day of recreation and be at liberty to amuse themselvs in their own way. The brighter religion can be painted, the more attractiv it will be. The more opportunities afforded to a man to pursue pleasure with his family on Sunday, the less likely he is to spend the day in dissipation and vice."

The Herald and News especially are urging the matter, and if it shall be successful great credit will accrue to them. The Herald enlisted in the cause of its own accord; the other papers were led to speak at this time because of the petitions being circulated. While the result depends upon the trustees of the museums, yet it is thought that they cannot refuse if the pressure upon them by the public is great enough. The museums are the people's and it seems an anomaly that they should hav to beg for what is theirs by right. We much prefer that the petition shall be considered as a demand in which all the people unite. That such demand may hereafter be needless, the Sunday laws should be swept from the state statute books.

Editorial Notes.

We learn from the St. Croix Courier, of St. Stephens, New Brunswick, that a branch of the National Liberal League is about to be established in that town.

S. Paris Davis, of Paola, Kan., wants the names and addresses of all house and sign painters. He has what he says are valuable points for them, in the shape of a book which he is trying to sell to raise money enough to save his home.

The Christian at Work says that under the stimulus of the thought and cultus of the day sermons hav become literary moral essays, which, but for a possible allusion now and then to Christ, might as well hav been delivered in the Forum at Rome eighteen hundred and eighty-five years ago.

The Independent finds fault with those "Christian men, and women even, from the East, who often find time to visit the Chinese places of prostitution in San Francisco by night, under the escort of a policeman, whom they pay liberally, though they giv neither time nor money to the Christian work for the salvation of the Chinese there."

The Methodist Review says: "The Madura Mission of the American Board has recently adopted a resolution to the effect that converts who hav in heathenism contracted polygamous marriages in accordance with caste laws may, in exceptional cases, be admitted as communicants without putting away either wife." Methodism in Madura would be called Mormonism in the United States.

One reason for disestablishing the English church, given by a "country squire," is that "the rural clergy are become a sacerdotal despotism—a despotism tempered by much self-sacrificing kindness, but still a despotism. And the new electors are showing in unmistakable ways that this despotism has become hateful and intolerable to them, and that now they hav the power, they will abate it." To an American this would seem about as valid an argument as could be advanced.

So wholesale was the dead-beating at Boston this year, says the Philadelphia Record, that the American Board of Foreign Missions will no longer send delegates and their families into private families to be guests during convention week. This year there were four thousand visitors that enjoyed free board. Some pastors brought large numbers of relativs and friends; six thrifty bridal couples spent a week of the honeymoon "D. H." Where three or four "delegates" were invited six or eight came; and so on.

A clique of bishops recently made the president a visit at the White House. They are represented in jolly mood, but reminded him that he was the son of a bishop. He replied he well remembered his father and every word of the catechism. They said they prayed for him. He said he was glad; hoped they would pray for him. Undoubtedly they will. It is presumable the visit was not without policy; perhaps precedes favors to be asked through legislativ sanction. "Their ways are past finding out," till the ends are gained.

W. H. Hurlburt, a journalist who failed to make the New York World a success because of his piety, has just returned from Europe. He reports that the French Assembly never misses an opportunity of "making faces at religion and the church," and that in England Mr. Chamberlain, the real master of the Liberal-Radical party, has gone beyond the advocates of disestablishment and "menaced the English church under cover of a general attack on religious instruction in the schools, and on endowments for religious purposes."

Our readers will regret to learn that Mr. Holland, secretary of the Free Religious Association—an article from whose pen appears on another page—has been ill for several weeks, but will rejoice that he is able now to recommence the fight for justice. Though too ill to write letters, Mr. Holland says he has "been able to read The Truth Seeker, and has found its bold, clear words as refreshing and strengthening as a tonic." We hope the author of "The Rise of Intellectual Liberty" will be able to often supplement The Truth Seeker's outspokenness with his own equally clear words for justice.

Some son of genius calling himself "American" occupies nearly two columns in Lucifer in criticising Courtlandt Palmer because the Business Committee of the New York State Freethinkers' Association objected to the hawking about in the hall at the last Convention of a prurient poem. and the editor of Lucifer complacently says "American's" incubration may stand as his criticism of the American Secular Union! If the czar of Russia should make a pilgrimage to Rome "American" would probably abuse Grover Cleveland and Mr. Harman would call it his opinion of Colonel Ingersoll. There is an enormous amount of logic in some Anarchistic craniums!

A citizen of Maurepas, La., in the Maurepas Gazette, makes some very pertinent inquiries, and reveals a rather suspicious lack of honesty somewhere among the Methodists of his district. "How is it," he asks, "if the members of a church are so very good, and receive so much benefit from the preaching of the gospel, that they do not support their ministers? Last year one of the deacons of the Methodist church here came to me and stated that unless they raised the munificent sum of five dollars, they would be deprived of a preacher for the coming year. I gave them one dollar that I sadly needed myself. A few days ago this same deacon came to me again and asked for another contribution, stating that the preacher only got seventy-five cents here last year, and that he, the said deacon, contributed that. Well, what became of my dollar? Is that deacon lying? Did he keep the money himself that I gave him for the preacher? or has he forgotten it?" We hav no sympathy for this citizen in the loss of his dollar, for he does not seem to believe in the Christian religion, and is not a member of the church. If he had spent his dollar for Freethought literature, he would hav had the double satisfaction of knowing where his money went, and of knowing he had done some good.

When some of Bradlaugh's friends applied for the use of the Town Hall in Stalybridge for a political meeting, the application was referred to the hall committee. During the discussion which took place in the committee, "one gentleman is reported to hav expressed the opinion that the point they had to consider was whether, if Jesus Christ had been on the earth, he would have voted for letting the hall to Mr. Bradlaugh. Another sapient councillor immediately capped this by remarking that whether Jesus Christ voted for it or not, he wouldn't!' No means were available for discovering Jesus Christ's opinion on the knotty question, whether or not Mr. Bradlaugh should lecture in Stalybridge Town Hall, so in default of divine guidance the matter was referred to the council. The latter body answered the question in the affirmativ.

Secularism received a boom at Cleveland, and the echoes hav not yet died away—in fact, the reverberations are booming back again in the form of an eight-page journal, called the Secular Age, published by J. D. Mallonee, assisted by G. C. Stoll. Mr. Mallonee is secretary of the Cleveland League, a young man of vigorous but conservativ thought, a close and clear writer, and a genial and pleasant gentleman to know. Mr. Stoll we do not remember to hav met. The Secular Age contains straightforward editorials, interesting communications, and judicious selections, and is well printed. We welcome Messrs. Mallonee and Stoll to the fray, believing they will strike heavy blows in Freethought's behalf. Mr. Mallonee has an article on "Woman's Suffrage" in this issue of The Truth Seeker, with which we disagree, but from which our readers can judge of his style.

"The parish without a school," says the Catholic Review, "is a doomed parish. The children are worse than the fathers, cooler in the faith, apt to fall into the indifference peculiar to the American soil, when brought up on the slim diet of a five-cent catechism. The influences here are all Protestant. There are no traditions but Protestant, no glories which are not Protestant or so made. The good pastor, steady in his government and ever watchful, will train his children into orderly adults, but his influence is purely personal, principle is absent, and withdrawn from his care they are inclined to follow the crowd. They hav not a real faith, for they hav little knowledge, and nothing of that which takes the place of knowledge—Catholic instinct. Catholics of this sort are frightfully numerous, particularly numerous in the parishes without schools." Education does not agree with Catholicism, that is certain. If Catholic astronomy had prevailed, the sun, moon, and stars would yet be traveling round the earth, or rather over the four corners of it.

The story is going the rounds of the press that a great many missionaries to the East are getting rich. This induces the Methodist journal of this city to issue this challenge:

"We challenge the writer, or any other, to giv us the names of the missionaries who hav become rich while engaged in missionary work. We know that most of them are barely able to liv on their salaries, are unable to educate their children at home except by special assistance, when superannuated are often in great straits for the necessaries of life, and die poor, leaving no legacy to their children but that of a self-denying, devoted, and unblemished life."

In The Truth Seeker of May 2, 1885, we copied from the National Reformer a letter from an Indian governmental official to Mrs. Annie Besant, one of the editors of that paper, in which was described the life of an American Methodist missionary: "Of this man's income," says Mrs. Besant's correspondent, "I shall try and giv you as near an account as possible, though it will fall short of what it actually is. He gets a salary equivalent to £300 per year of English money, his wife one of £96, and he has three children, for each of whom he is allowed £30. Thus you will see his income amounts, in cash only, to £486. Besides this he is found a house, and this is without exception the most commodious in the station, and has a large kitchen garden and fruit orchard attached. He is supplied with servants and a horse and phaeton. When he goes out in the winter months, ostensibly to preach to the poor benighted heathen in the surrounding districts, but really to hav one constant picnic, for camp-life in the winter in India is nothing else, his considerate employers giv him, in addition to his salary, one shilling per mile as traveling allowance, besides finding for him all the carriage he may require for his camp equipages. This is a station with about, at most, a population of twenty Europeans, and has a grand edifice in the shape of a church. This, by some oversight, has never been consecrated, and I hav heard it said, and that with every assurance of the truth of the statement, that were it not for this church being, as it is, unconsecrated, the Wesleyan Methodist would not be allowed to preach therein, as at present he does every Sunday. Bigotry could not go very much farther. Collections are taken up every Sunday evening, but I will leave you to make a tolerably correct guess of how they are disposed of when I tell you that the services in the evening are held at four in the afternoon, because the church cannot afford lights to hold them later. It is needless to tell you that this hour, in our Indian climate, is almost without exception the most unpleasant of all the twenty-four. The Wesleyan to whom I refer was originally a cowboy in Texas, and then was called to the ministry. He has made a good investment, though the two former, as being more useful, were the more respectable callings of the three." Unfortunately the name of the self-sacrificing missionary is not given, but perhaps Dr. Buckley can identify him from the description. If he is not getting rich, he is at least on the highroad to a comfortable prosperity.

N. G. W.—The Ironclad Age is still published by Dr. Monroe at the corner of Tennessee street and Indiana avenue, Indianapolis, Ind. The Age is a first-rate Infidel paper; and though the editor's personality is too excessivly strong to permit his co-operating with others, he is yet doing a valiant work in his own way. More power to his elbow, and a hale old age for the Ironclad!

Letters from Friends.

SPRINGVILLE, UTAH, Nov. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In reading my TRUTH SEEKER I see it speaks favorably of more pictures in future to illustrate our journal of Freethought, provided we can increase the number of subscribers, or bring in means otherwise to pay the expense thereof. I, for one, am in favor of the plan, and will do as far as my time and limited means will admit, feeling assured the company will do their best to favor their subscribers.

And, judging by what I read, we hav some noble leaders or champions in our Freethought organization, and we should all be up and doing our best with them to aid the cause for the emancipation of the human race from bondage to priestcraft, or any other craft that tends to our injury.

I send you my dollar for the Campaign Fund, which you will oblige me by giving to Mr. S. P. Putnam, our secretary, when convenient, who, I expect, will send me a certificate of annual membership.

I hope to be able before long to do a little for the Tent and Bruno Funds, as they should not be forgotten by any of us, and all who are able should spare a little money for the good it would do in the cause in which we are engaged, and by the many little sums we should be able to "lend a hand" for the advancement of the cause of truth.

I want to get another subscriber along with me for THE TRUTH SEEKER, so I may not send before next month. Inclosed I send a bill of what is wanted this time.

L. W. GALLUP.

MAIDEN, MONT., Nov. 11, 285.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 31, 1885, is at hand, and as you ask, "Shall we illustrate THE TRUTH SEEKER?" I hasten to answer, by all means, yes.

Mr. R. S. Baker is a regular brick in his liberal offer, but I think the necessary wherewithal could be better raised by an increase in the price of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Should THE TRUTH SEEKER become illustrated like Frank Leslie's, or anywhere near as well, none would expect to hav it furnished for $3. It would be worth, at the very lowest estimate, $4, if not $5, and I would be willing to pay $5 for mine, or take two at the same price it is now, and if it would only cost $75 a week more, wouldn't 50c. advance in price pay that?

Yours for illustration, S. G. SHARPLESS.

STRASBURG, ILL., Nov. 5, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to see that the prospect is brightening for the Liberals to hav a pictorial paper. The Brother Jonathan, published in New York, used to illustrate the Christmas week number, and if you are not tired of "suggestions" and "motions," I will suggest that THE TRUTH SEEKER be illustrated New Years or Christmas week, Easter week, Fourth of July week, and Thanksgiving week. That will giv us four pictorials a year, and far enough apart so as not to become monotonous, and at a time of year when they would hav a large sale at ten or fifteen cents per copy. Be sure and giv the above your prayerful attention. A. YORK.

MILFORD, MASS., Nov. 15, 1885.

FRIEND EUGENE: I hav just been reading THE TRUTH SEEKER while thoughtless men and women are wending their way to the church to attend to their devotions. What better act of devotion can I perform than to inclose three dollars for THE TRUTH SEEKER, although the paper is paid for till January 1st? I enjoy reading the editorials—always excepting the ones to delinquent subscribers. Liberals, above all others, should pay their subscriptions promptly. I pay nothing for that great trinity of poverty-breeders, priests, tobacco, and liquor. By so doing, strange as it may seem to some, I still retain my personal liberty, and am enabled to obey the injunction of Paul, "Owe no man anything." Send in your subscriptions, and THE TRUTH SEEKER will greet you in better spirits. The Westminster Catechism was once supreme in this state, and would hav debarred me from my devotions in this letter. What was taught as our duty then? This was the great question then: What is the chief end of man? To glorify God. Laws were enacted to make us glorify according to their belief, and penalties prescribed and executed. The New Haven Colony, Oct. 25, 1639, voted, "The word of God shall be the only rule to be attended unto in ordering the affayres of government in this plantation."

How plain that was, for the book reads, "that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." Yet sorrow and suffering followed that godly law. In 1647 "William Blayden was publicly and severely whipped for not attending meeting, although he pleaded that all the clothes he had were unfit to wear, being all wet through the preceding Saturday, as he had been abroad after cattle in the woods in a violent rain, and on the Sunday had kept his bed." Those law-makers fled from godly laws, for all laws are claimed to be such, representing the ideas of God held by the people who made them. Compare our privileges this Sunday with the time that William Blayden suffered! We only learn by comparison. And yet priests are often holding those law-makers up to us as paragons of virtue, men whose footsteps God in a special manner directed. Macaulay says, "Those who compare the age in which their lot has fallen with a golden age which exists only in their imagination, may talk of degeneracy and decay; but no man who is correctly informed as to the past will be disposed to take a morose or desponding view of the present." We take a cheerful view of the present, although laws are still on the statute that would make my Sunday devotions be followed by penalties could they be enforced. But, thanks to the Nonconformists of the centuries, we are safe from the effects of those laws. There is an unseen, unwritten law—tradition, custom, call it by what name you will—that holds and controls more people than the statute law does. They are controled more effectually because the mind is captiv to superstition. They dare not be free from old rites and ceremonies for fear of ridicule from taking a new position. Men that can face death at the cannon's mouth fail to face slurs, jests, and all manner of ridicule for following where an opinion says "Come." We believe in new ideas that are demonstrated, and in results that follow them. We do not believe that

> "Earth was made by one almighty,
> And to meddle is to mar;
> Change is rash and ever was so,
> We are happy as we are."

Many are apt to be faint-hearted, of little faith, and say, What does all this agitation amount to? They can see no advancement. The ocean with its ceaseless motion purifies and givs health; the stagnant and inactiv body of water givs miasma, fever, and death. The hands on the dial of time show us changes that are imperceptible from day to day. From 1630 to 1644 "no man could vote in this state unless he was a church-member. Then it required a certificate of two ministers if he went to a new town." To-day our voting list does not reflect a list of church-members. Change is the rule in the material world as well. In 1833 a man in Connecticut thanked God that he lived "in a hilly conntry where it was impossible to build a railroad." Now the cars of the air-line railroad run directly through his yard, within four feet of his house. If that man has not changed his views of God, he certainly has enlarged views about building railroads. Life would not be worth living were it not for new thoughts, ideas, designs, inventions, and a giving up of the old, thus showing a transformation scene eclipsing any on the stage, to men of thought. How many believe in the new, yet profess to believe in the old! Hypocrits from fear. The men and women who say they accept what their intellect and reasoning powers compel them to believe take no notes for pay in the future, at some time when it is popular. They are paid at once in a coin that has been acknowledged since time began, yet cannot be bought with gold.

> "Hypocrisy will serve as well
> To propagate a church as zeal,
> As persecution and promotion
> Do equally advance devotion;
> So round, white stones will serve, they say,
> As well as eggs, to make hen's lay."

CHARLES C. JOHNSON.

SARNIA, ONT., Oct. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I take great pleasure in announcing to the illuminati that "the people which sat in darkness saw great light, and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." Mr. J. E. Remsburg gave his new lecture on "Sabbath-Breaking or Sunday Tyranny" to an appreciativ audience of about five hundred, in our town hall on the evening of the 20th inst. This is the first lecture ever delivered in this place by a Freethinker, and created considerable confusion amongst the ranks of the enemy, who had exerted themselvs for several days previous to the lecture, either to prevent its being delivered, or to prevent a good audience attending. Fortunately both these schemes were frustrated by the common sense and love of justice which control the majority of our people, even if they are partially muzzled and blinded by superstition. The lecturer did not arrive in town till nearly half an hour after the time announced, but when he did appear, lost no time in proceeding to business, and continued to the end without any interruption, in his usual gentlemanly manner. Having proved by numerous quotations from the highest authorities that the Sabbath (or holy day) as now kept was neither instituted nor observed either by Christ or any of the early Christian fathers, he took his seat amidst the plaudits of a delighted audience.

The good work goes bravely on. In this town ten years ago there were only two men who avoved themselvs Freethinkers; to-day I should judge there are nearly two hundred.

E. A. VIDAL.

HIGHLANDS, N. C., Nov. 11, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Find in the inclosed envelope six dollars—three to pay my year's subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and three for James Beal. Mr. Beal requests me to thank you for him for waiting upon him; also to tell you how it fares with the godless in this Christian town. I am also behind time with my payment, for the reason that our season was late, and we met with a reverse on the start that it took some time for us to recover from. I will not tell you all about it, for you might tell Aunt Elmina—and she never kept a hotel in Highlands; and if she had, she would probably hav done about as we hav done in regard to being true to conviction.

We hav never felt at liberty to say anything to strangers that might in any way expose our radical views, and hav carefully kept our Liberal books, papers, and tracts in our family sitting-room, which is well filled with them. And whenever anyone asks for them, they get all they want without reserve; or when anyone seeks to know our views, we do not hesitate to frankly tell them just where we stand. Hence we hav become well known as Infidels in this part of the country, and the preachers and opposition houses appear to be making capital out of the fact.

We hav no prejudices in our minds that would cause us to show the least difference between guests on account of sectional or sectarian differences. We hav tried to be true to self—and hence to all—and to be consistent with all the demands of reason and right; and we feel we hav done our duty to the best of our ability. But we hav had to meet and liv against prejudice in our business here, beyond anything we could hav imagined. We began to think we had lived it down to that degree that we could go on our way unmolested, but we were suddenly made to know our mistake. We now know what to expect, and are waiting to see how things will turn.

The hard times hav hurt our trade; so last spring we advertised, and succeeded in getting a nice company together—mostly from Charleston, and nearly all Presbyterians—who came to stay very late. They soon found out we were "d——d Yanks"—and, worse yet, unbelievers; and curiosity must hav ed some one to take a TRUTH SEEKER from our room, and, after examining the woeful thing, threw it on the back steps of the kitchen—as if to let us know they had found out what wicked Infidels we were. Then, finding that the Presbyterian boarding-house was almost without boarders, and with no prospect of getting any more for the season, they all skipped over there, led by one of the lambs of God who was one of the company. One on the Presbyterian side told me that the reason they left was because I was an Infidel and kept Infidel tracts in my house, which, coming to the knowledge of Christians, would disgust them and drive them from the house. And he also said that the story was around that I had committed the heinous crime of writing to some northern paper, stating that this would make a good place for an Infidel colony. I think so still. If Freethinkers would come here, and stand by one another, their enterprising proclivities would build up business so that all could make a good living. Presbyterianism will thrive on very poor soil, but Liberals who hav to contend against odds must hav a good chance in order to succeed well.

We hav advantages over the surrounding country that will make a thriving town here in the near future. For climate and health we hav no equal in the United States. This givs one more solid comfort in the course of the year than can be had anywhere else; i. e., if other things are equal.

I think more of THE TRUTH SEEKER now than ever. I hav been a regular subscriber for eight years or more, and shall always be as long as I am able to pay for it—unless it should at some future time become too conservativ. I would be glad to get you more subscribers, if I could.

The most earnest Liberals hav gone away, and the rest do not appear to be educated up to the present demands of the cause; at least they cannot be organized so as to sustain one another against the oppressions of the church. The most appear to wish to hold on to the name of Christian, "to take away their reproach;" others are afraid of being connected with cranks; others are disheartened by this environment, and do not see the use in enduring social ostracism and loss in business for no apparent good. A few good Liberals, who fully understand our wants and are willing to serve the cause, would giv others heart and courage. It is a deplorable fact, however, that one must hav plenty of money, or be in a way to make money, in order to hav influence for the good of an unpopular cause.

The Presbyterian church is now finished, and stands in full view of this house. It is the idol of their worship, and the majority of the other Christians appear to hav joined them in that worship. Having built God a fine house, they seem now determined to help him further by driving away his enemies. Their minister told me, two years ago, when the project of building the church was commenced, that as I was tearing down his work by my influence, he should work against me—or words to that effect. This I had forgotten; but it appears now that he has been doing it—in an indirect way, at least.

We rejoice at the success of the cause elsewhere, and the conventions, and are pleased with the work of Watts, Putnam, and Reynolds, and cheered by the good words of Ingersoll. We still hope that Watts and Putnam will visit our town.

Yours for the right, JOSEPH FRITTS.

FREEMAN, MO., Nov. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Having watched the columns of each issue of our organ during the six months I hav been a subscriber thereto, hoping that some one of your many correspondents would hav something to say on the subject of mottoes, and being disappointed in that hope, leads me to take up the cudgel, or rather the Faber, and endeavor to direct Liberal attention to this overlooked field of minor importance. I scarcely know, either, that I am fully justified in using the term "minor" in this particular, for it is beyond question a thing of fact that the minds of young children (who must be the coming army of Liberals) are greatly influenced by this thing of wall mottoes, emblems, pictures, designs, etc. The writer well remembers early impressions from several of these, particularly that of a plaster-of-paris representation of the crucifixion which was brought to his notice at about five years of age. He can see it with the "mind's eye" yet. These thoughts, then, together with the fact that no one else has done so, lead me to offer something on the subject of mottoes.

First, well-wrought and properly framed mottoes are an attractiv and ornamental kind of furniture. Children are used to them, and Christian homes, churches, and Sunday-schools abound in them. Every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER remembers from childhood the "Rock of Ages," "Simply to the Cross I Cling," "Gates Ajar," and scores of other word and design mottoes that hav long been used to further the superstition of the Christian mythology. Now the question is, can not Liberals beat this sword into a plowshare to turn under some of this rank and weedy growth of superstition, and cultivate instead the fair flowers of the Religion of Humanity?

I will offer here a few mottoes that I hav designed myself, and do so rather as suggestiv than otherwise, and in the hope that some other member of the "Aristocracy of Freethought" may also offer something in the same connection:

1. No gods revered
   Nor devils feared,
   Nor prophet, priest, nor king;
   Here Love remains
   And Reason reigns
   Supreme in everything.

2. "Rock of Ages," fare thee well!
   Thou hast lost thy magic spell;
   Hark thee to thy funeral knell
   Rung by science' golden bell.

3. No sovereign but the People,
   No deity but the Goddess of Liberty.

4. God and the people are one.

5. Peace be unto our home.

6. Reason reigns in the realm of reality.

7. "Science versus superstition."

[Pictorial motto, to contain a healthy youth (Science) with some appropriate emblem in his hand, standing erect over the vanquished form of a skeleton (superstition) in whose bony hands are clutched the sword of the inquisition and roll of manuscript church forgeries.]

8. Love is the light of life,
Fear is but blight and strife

Now, Mr. Editor, I hope that some of these I hav suggested may pass muster, and if any Freethinker anywhere should adopt either one or more of these to adorn his or her home, I should be glad to hear from that one. I hav adopted them all in spirit, and expect soon to do so in letter. I will also agree to adopt similarly any and all good mottoes and Liberal emblems that any other good brother or sister may suggest.

T. M. HORNE.

ON INFIDELITY.—AN OPEN LETTER TO JAMES BERRY.

ADRIAN, MICH., Nov. 6, 285.

DEAR FRIEND: In our conversation a few days since you spoke of me as an Infidel. When I told you that I was not aware of being an Infidel, you said you thought I was, as I had once told you that I was an Infidel. Now, friend James, when I told you that I said at the same time, "According to Webster, as an exponent for the Christian church." You said if I added that you had forgotten it.

Suppose, friend James, you were in Turkey, and the pious Mohammedans were to tell you that there was one god, and Mohammed was his prophet, and that he was divinely inspired to write the holy Koran, which all good Mussulmans accept as their religious text-book; and that if you didn't believe this, you were an Infidel; what would you think of that? He would refer you to their dictionary, compiled by their lexicographers, which defines an Infidel to be one that denies Mohammed as the prophet of God, and the holy Koran as a divine revelation.

Again, do you not know that with the Roman Catholic church all the Protestants are Infidels, and with the more strict evangelical Christian churches the more Liberal Christians are called Infidels? So you see this is confounding things, and we by no means get the true rendering of the word.

Now, friend James, since you have been so kind as to open your lumber-yard office, and seat it for my old orthodox Quakers—if it is not a misnomer to call them such—and as they have made it a point for a long number of years to speak of me to others as an Infidel, which they, in their ignorance of the derivation of the word, use as a term of reproach, in both their written and printed discourses—and in my younger years I did not care to hav the term applied to me, but of latter years it has lost all its scare—it is possible, friend James, that a little light on this subject of Infidelity might be of use to you, as well as to my old Quaker friends. Now, in order to get at the true meaning of a word, we must go back to the root of that word. In doing this we will find that "Infidelity" has its derivation from the word "fidelity," that is, faithful, loyal, true, etc. Hence "Infidelity" would be the opposite of that, that is, unfaithful, untrue, etc.

Now, friend James, as you have been acquainted with me some, in trade and otherwise, for a number of years, I guess you will not say that I have ever been unfaithful in my promises to you. Very well, then; I am not Infidel with you at this point. Has ever any of my old orthodox friends reported to you that I ever wronged, or tried to wrong, him, in either word or deed, out of his just dues? If so, please fetch him to me, and let him make it appear, and I will agree with you now to pay him back fourfold. Now, if they can't fetch any charge against me, at this point, then I am not an Infidel with them here. "But then," I think I hear you say, "we don't mean to charge you with being an Infidel—that is, unfaithful—in your worldly business, but it is in your non belief or faith in God and in his son, Jesus Christ our Lord, as revealed to us thrugh the holy Bible, or word of God, that you are an Infidel." Well, now, let us see about that. If you have carefully read my little letter so far, you have seen that, from a Roman Catholic standpoint, the Protestants are all Infidels, and that the more Liberal Christian churches are Infidel with the more conservative. Hence, as I have said, we confound language when we thus mix in words where they don't belong. Now, friend James, allow me to give you the scientific rendering of the word "Infidel," as given by one of our Revolutionary patriots, who was in his activ life one hundred years before Webster was born. Hear him:

"Infidelity does not consist in believing or in disbelieving, but in professing to believe what he does not believe."

Now, taking that rendering of the word as the correct one—which I think you will understand it to be, when you think closely ever the matter—we will now compare notes, and try to see who is the Infidel and where he is. And first, as regards myself, as I don't profess loyalty to the Catholic Bible, nor yet to King James's version of it, or to any other holy, written Bible, I can't be Infidel to any of them, though I may be an Infidel in the eye of the orthodox Bible devotee. And for this the pious Christian used to have the Infidel beheaded or sent to the Inquisition, there to be tortured to death or openly burnt at the stake. Or as the poet has it:

"When hapless unbelievers were condemned
As sacrifices and burnt offerings,
And the black smoke of human holocausts
Hung like a frown upon the face of heaven
And seemed to blot out pity from the skies,
Tainting the ambient air with nauseous steams
And suffocating stench of burning human flesh,
Incense appropriate to the fiends alone,
Yet thought to be acceptable to God
As sweet and savory odors are to men.
And this was deemed a righteous act of faith."

But that happy time for the Christian church when they were able to hav everything their own way is now past, we hope never to return. About all that they can now do is to slander and abuse, and warn their young members to hold no communion with the unbelievers.

Now, how is it with these Episcopal Quakers, that you are so kind as to turn your lumber-yard office into a church for them one day out of seven? They have left the fundamental doctrine of the Society of Friends, viz., the light within, and now profess to take King James's version of the old Jewish Bible, with the New Testament added, for their religious text-book, and they profess to believe this book to be the inspired word of God. Now, for the present we will accept their claims for their Bible, and see what follows. In the language of Professor Draper in his work, "Science and Religion," "A divine revelation can admit of no improvement, no change, no advancement." And this would seem to be common sense. Has this Bible never been revised, never been changed? If there is any scholar, a good Christian representative, who is willing to affirm that the Bible never has been revised or changed over, we would like to hear from him through an open, printed letter, and hope he will tell us what he knows on the subject, and give us his authorities. We have before us more than a dozen volumes of different authorities on this subject, some in the church, and some outside; some on this side of the ocean, and some on the other side—all are scholars and representative men—that we might refer you to, but as this is an open letter, James, to thee, and my renegade Quaker church, I will merely refer you to one or two standard writers among the early Friends. But first let me say that it was about the middle of the third century that Origen, the celebrated Christian father, a man who had almost unlimited power in the church, thought proper to make a selection from the great number of books then current among the Christians. The selection included the canon in circulation at this day. Through the dominant influence Origen possessed in the church at this period, his selection soon became popular, and in the year 363 was declared by the council of Laodicea to be the only genuin scriptures.

William Penn, in speaking of this council, said: "I demand of our adversaries if they are well assured of those men who first collected, embodied, and declared them [the scriptures] authentic by a public canon which we read was in the council of Laodicea, held 363 years after Christ. I say, How do they know that these men rightly discerned true from spurious? Now, sure it is that some of the scriptures taken in by one council were rejected by another for apocryphal, and that which was left out by the former for apocryphal was taken in by the latter for canonical. Now, sure it is that they contradict each other, and as true that they have erred respecting the present belief" (Penn's Works, London, 1784, vol. i, pp. 301–4)

Robert Barclay, a scholar, and standard writer for the principles of Friends, says: "We, that is, the Society of Friends, do not accept the scriptures as the primary rule of faith and practice."

George Fox, in his "Journal" (Leeds edition, vol. i, p. 187), says: "I directed them to the divine light of Christ, and his spirit in their hearts, which would let them see all their evil thoughts, words, and actions that they had thought, spoken, or acted, by which light they might see their sin. This, I told them, was the first step to peace, even to stand still in the light that showed them their sins."

Joseph John Gurney was a member of the English Episcopal church up to his riper years, and then fell in with the Society of Friends, and, though still holding on to his Episcopal notions, became a preacher among them. He visited America forty years ago, and spent some four years here, preaching and writing. In his first American, from the third London, edition, p. 101, he says: "Now, it is in the scriptures only that the attributes of our heavenly father are fully made known to us, and therefore it is only through the religion of the Bible that we can obtain an adequate notion of sin. But the cardinal point revealed to us in scripture, and only in scripture, without a knowledge of which it is impossible for any man to form a full estimate of sin, is this, that God so loved us as to send his only begotten son into the world to be a sacrifice for our sins."

Now, friend James, I think it is not hard to see that there is a vast difference between the base that these early Friends laid down for their followers to build a religious life on and that of this English aristocrat—which he was—that had never got out of the Episcopal faith of the church of his childhood. And now, while these Quakers profess to be Friends, they do in deed adhere to the Episcopal doctrine of J. J. Gurney, and other leaders with him, and on the first page of their new Discipline they have the Episcopal creed inserted, as a test of membership. And yet, as I have said, they profess to be the Society of Friends, and accordingly have captured their property wherever they have been able. Now, friend James, if they are not Infidels, in thus professing one thing, for a purpose, while they are something else, I fear they are something worse.

SAML. D. MOORE.

PITTSBURGH, PA, Nov. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It having been duly announced that Mr. Charles Watts would shortly arrive in the city to deliver a course of lectures, and would hold himself in readiness to debate the respectiv merits of Secularism and Christianity with any accredited representativ of the Evangelical Alliance; it was confidently expected that some valiant champion of the church would stand up in defense of her dogmas, but, so far, we hav been disappointed.

Maltby Hall, on Sunday the 8th inst, was crowded to its utmost capacity long before the time for the opening of the exercises. The lecture was entitled, "Secularism: Destructiv and Constructiv."

Sunday evening Mr. Watts lectured at Mendell's Hall in Allegheny City on, "Unbelief: What is it, and What has it Done for the World?" At the close of the lecture an invitation was given to any one to criticise the same. A certain Mr. Thresher felt called upon to stand up for Jesus, and defend his creed, which he did in pretty good style, but when Mr. Watts got through with him, and the applause had subsided, he more resembled a sheaf of wheat thoroughly threshed than a thresher.

The hall was packed, and an intense interest was maintained to the close of one of the grandest lectures ever listened to in Allegheny City, and Mr. Watts was urged to deliver another before he left for the West.

Friday evening, November 12th, was utilized by Mr. Watts to giv a reception to his friends at Maltby Hall. About one hundred persons met to cultivate the acquaintance of the eloquent Englishmen and enjoy the sociabilities of the occasion.

Mr. Hoover opened the exercises with a short speech on the necessity of cultivating our social natures.

Mr. Watts, being called upon, responded with a speech upon the necessity of organization, and recited "The Old General's Address to His Troops."

Mr. W. S. Douthitt recited a poem entitled "Eucher; or, Go it Alone." Mr. Grundy spoke upon education and the influence of woman.

The exercises closed by Mr. Watts reciting, as only he can recite, a selection from "The Lady of Lyons," Claude Melnotte's Apology. With music, chat, and eloquence the time sped swiftly, and when the parting hour arrived all were ready to repeat with the Dutch Baptist, "I vash so glad I vas here dis night."

On Sunday, the 15th, Mr. Watts again lectured at Maltby Hall, his subject being "The American Secular Union: Its Necessity and the Justice of Its Demands." This lecture was a lucid exposition of the nature, aims, and methods of the union, and a searching and exhaustiv examination of the Nine Demands. A better plea for the demands and a more complete vindication of their justice was never made, and its effect upon the massiv audience was of the most salutary character.

In the evening Mr. Watts spoke again at Mendell's Hall, his subject being "The Nightmare of Theology."

"Reason and theology always hav been antagonistic to each other. The basis of theology is speculation, and its field the emotional nature of man It is incompatible with civilization. Theology is born of fear and credulity. It is a fiend dressed in sable ready to crush intellectuality and destroy human feeling." Cited, Tertullian, Calvin, Knox, and Loyola. "The Inquisition was Catholic; the star chamber was Protestant. Until the seventeenth century every scientist was insulted by theology, and it is only restrained to day by lack of power. The martyrs of science did more than Christ. He never added one scientific fact to the knowledge of his day. Theology demoralized even Christ himself, and its evil influence has continued down to the present time."

Much more was said that would bear repeating, but space admonishes me to be brief. At the close of the lecture he made an urgent appeal to the audience to criticise the same, but either because all agreed with him, or the orthodox party, warned by the fate of Mr. Thresher, failed to respond.

During the week the following item appeared in the Pittsburgh Leader:

"It seems a little strange that Revs. Coovert and Forscutt, and Messrs. Moore et al., do not appear to be in a hurry to meet Mr. Watts in open debate. Now is the time, and they should not wait till Mr. Watts is gone and then pound him to pieces in the local pulpits, as ministers usually do."

This had the effect to bring out the Rev. Mark H. Forscutt in a card, and a debate may possibly grow out of it on Mr. Watts's return to the city.

Mr. Watts, during his stay in the city, was the guest of those whole-souled Secularists, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Abel, of 635 Smithfield street. Mr. Watts left on the 16th inst. to fulfil engagements in Ohio, bearing with him the best wishes of all the Secularists, and the respect of such Christians as were fortunate enough to make his acquaintance.

Yours fraternally, HARRY HOOVER,
Sec. Pittsburgh Secular Society.

HAGERSTOWN, IND., Oct. 29, 285.

MR. EDITOR: The valiant, brilliant J. E. Remsburg lectured at Hagerstown October 16th on "Sabbath-Breaking." He handled his subject in a masterly manner. There was a good audience, both ladies and gentlemen, many of whom were orthodox Christians. All were well pleased. The Liberals say we must hav him again. If we could hav such lecturers here every week I would go if we lived twenty miles away, and I had to walk. I always feel happy after such lectures—as though I were in heaven already. ALMIRA PIPHER.

POE, O., Nov. 1, 285.

MR. EDITOR: John E. Remsburg lectured in Phenix Hall, Medina, O, Oct. 6th, 7th, and 8th. Owing to the very inclement weather the audience was not as large as we should hav desired, but it was generally a very intelligent one. The first evening Mr. Remsburg's theme was "False Claims;" second, "Sabbath-Breaking;" third, "Bible Morals." He is a young man of undoubted ability, a fluent speaker, and handles his subject with candor and skill, convincing those who hear him that he is fully posted on the matters of which he treats.

For fully an hour and a half each evening he kept his audience in rapt attention, and at the finish was enthusiastically applauded Come again, Brother Remsburg.

Yours as ever, W. L. FARNSWORTH.

ORTONVILLE, MICH., Nov. 13, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Find herewith four dollars, for which please send me one copy of Andrew Jackson Davis's last book, entitled, "Beyond the Valley;" one copy of "Pocket Atlas of the World," as per your advertisment in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The remaining two dollars please apply to my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Friend "Mac," THE TRUTH SEEKER continues to show noble effort on your part. Please say to your brother that I never miss a line of his truly interesting communications when on his annual tour to New England. They are thoroughly interesting and instructiv. He is a fine writer, and impresses his kindly, intelligent manhood upon every sentence; while your own remarks, in connection with Saladin's fine notice of you in his London paper, are most noble. You are ever self-sacrificing, and true as steel to the memory of the great Bennett. But I wish your brother George could see a photograph I hav of you, if he likes to look upon verdancy. A regular singed cat! Your old friend, T. S. ANDREWS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Wicked Old Cat.

The old cat sat on the garden rail,
Waving her paw and wagging her tail,
Teaching her kittens to growl and hiss.
Now, what do you think of a cat like this?

The kittens five all sat in a row;
Whatever she did, they did just so,
First she meowed, and then she spat.
Now, what do you think of a cat like that?

She taught them all her wicked old plans,
To lick the cream from the dairy cans;
While to steal the meat she said was bliss.
Now, what do you think of a cat like this?

She taught them to sing from D to F,
Till all the neighbors were nearly deaf;
And never to catch a mouse or rat.
Now, what do you think of a cat like that?

But her lecture didn't continue long,
For a big dog heard her teachings wrong;
He snatched her up by the end of her tail
And dropped her into the water-pail,
And the kittens were left to weep and wail.

—Chicago Tribune.

A Thanksgiving Story.

Thanksgiving eve, and a dreary, gloomy eve it was, with its dark, threatening clouds and chilly winds. Nevertheless, the city bristled with life, the shop-windows glowed with lights, and gay throngs of young people promenaded the streets, while at the market place the old folks were busily engaged in purchasing turkeys for the morrow, and sampling piles of fragrant apples, which were heaped like glowing topaz and ruby on the many stalls round about. Apparently everybody was happy and at peace with the world. But one poor, shabbily-dressed old man, with a troubled look upon his care-worn features, did not seem as happy as one of his age should, as he stopped beside a stall, and eyed with an almost greedy expression a large, fat turkey.

"Would you like a turkey, sir?"

The old gentleman, whose name was Mr. Mayfield, looked vaguely at the ruddy-cheeked market-man, as if he hardly understood what the latter meant.

"No, sir, thank you. I shall dispense with a turkey this year. I am only an old man, living alone with my wife, and not much food is required," replied the old gentleman sadly.

"But this is Thanksgiving eve," said the butcher, "and most of our customers hav engaged one."

"That may be," responded Mr. Mayfield, "but we can get along without one; and besides," with a hard, bitter laugh, "I don't see that I've anything to be thankful for, and——"

But just at this moment a finely-dressed young man of some twenty-five years, followed by a servant carrying a huge basket filled with groceries of every description, paused before the stall.

"What are your turkeys worth?" he asked.

"Only ten cents per pound, sir," answered the polite butcher. "Do you wish one?"

"Yes; the largest one you hav," replied the young man, without taking the slightest notice of the ragged old man by his side.

"That's Percy Winn, the wealthy young Infidel. I wonder why he didn't speak? Surely he hasn't got above a respectable old man like me, even if I am poor!" said the latter to himself, as he walked slowly and somewhat feebly away. "Maybe his recent marriage has something to do with it. Yet that can't be, for only yesterday I met him, and he spoke as politely as you please. There's some other cause. However, it doesn't matter; besides, I needn't expect anything better of an Infidel."

By this time our old friend had reached his home. Going up a pair of dilapidated stairs that threatened to fall at each step, he entered a shabby back room with only one window.

Here he sat down before the smoldering handful of coals, to think of the good old times, to ponder over the golden days that were long since gone by. Oh, how it all came back to him now—the bright afternoons at Maywood farm, with its wide-spreading fields, the loads of grain creaking over the barn floor; his wife, now old and feeble as he, standing on the kitchen threshold, watching the chickens as they strayed hither and yon amid the yellow stubble of the reaped rye-fields, the tall maples uplifting their crimson heads by the swamp, and the neighbors' children (he had one of his own) coming back from nut-hunting, with shouts of laughter and merry, sunburnt faces.

"And to be asked if I wanted to buy a turkey for Thanksgivin', when I used to raise' em by the hundred!" he mournfully said to his wife. "And to be livin' here over a grocery store, and on a back street at that, when I used to hav all those green meadows to look at, and the sweet smell of autumn woods to breathe in. I tell you, Mary, it ain't livin' at all, and we'd be better off if we were dead. It ain't the same world it used to be, since old Deacon Rochester forclosed that mortgage and turned us out of house and home. And young Winn—even he is changed. I met him to-night, but he didn't speak. I hardly thought he would do the like, Infidel as he is, 'specially when his father and I were such good friends before he died. But as I'm gettin' old I must expect to be slighted and forgotten, for the world has no use for old people like us, Mary."

"No, that's so, John," agreed his wife, while through her mind flitted thoughts of the many happy Thanksgivings she had spent at Maywood Farm, and visions of snow-white biscuits, cranberry sauce, the steaming teapot, and a nice brown turkey came vividly before her.

. . . . . .

"I wonder what can be keeping Percy? It's time he was here," said young Mrs. Winn, peering anxiously through the lace-curtained window.

"Oh, nothing, Cora," and that young gentleman burst into the room like a gale of wind. "It's all right, dear; the deed is signed and delivered, and I hav it here in my pocket, ready to hand over to our homeless, friendless, and poverty-stricken old friends," he added, as soon as he recovered his breath.

"Is that so? Oh, I'm so glad!" and Mrs. Cora smiled until her face looked all rose-red lips and pearl-white teeth.

"Yes. And now all we hav to do is to carry out our pre-arranged plans. And what do you think, Cora? I met the old gentleman to-night."

"You did!"

"Yes, face to face; and he seemed surprised that I didn't speak."

"And why didn't you, Percy?"

"If I had I couldn't hav kept the secret five minutes."

"Pshaw!" ejaculated Cora.

"It's true, nevertheless. And, Cora, you havn't the slightest idea of how I feel."

"How's that?" asked Cora, with a merry twinkle in her dark eyes.

"I feel so happy—feel as if I had done something to alleviate the sufferings of my fellow-man. Surely I am the happiest mortal alive," and, throwing his fur cap into the air and deftly catching it again on his head, our young friend executed a "clog" in such an able manner as to elicit hearty applause from his better half, who stood by an amused spectator.

At its conclusion Cora burst into a hearty laugh.

"Percy," said she, "what a child you are! Act sensibly, and sit down to your supper; it has been waiting some time."

"Perhaps I am a child," said her husband, dubiously, taking his place at the table; "but I cannot help thinking of poor old Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield and their wretched condition."

"Yes, they are indeed wretched. But hav you sent the turkey and things?" inquiringly asked his wife.

"Yes, everything is gone. Bill, the coachman, has just left with them in company with Ann, the cook, and by the time we arrive dinner will be waiting."

"Well, then, that's all that is necessary," said Cora, as she pictured to herself the happiness of that coming dinner.

Thanksgiving morn broke clear and bright. There had been somewhat of a storm in the night, and a flurry of snow, but it was all over now, and the sun came out and its golden rays penetrated the little room where sat old Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield at their lonely breakfast. A small bit of beef-steak, which they had left over from supper the evening before, a slice of hard baker's bread, and two cups of weak tea constituted the meal.

"A fine morning," commented Mrs. Mayfield, looking at the narrow glimpse of blue sky which was visible from the little window.

"Yes, and I'm glad of that for the sake of those who hav the means to enjoy themselvs. But Thanksgivin' is no more that other days to us, Mary," added the aged husband with a sigh.

"True, and——" but just at that moment "Rap, rap," came on the door, frightening the old people nearly out of their wits.

"Bless my soul!" ejaculated old Mrs. Mayfield, "who in the world can that be?"

"I don't know," answered Mr. Mayfield, going toward the door as fast as his age and infirmities would allow.

"A note, sir," said a boy, "from Mr. Winn."

"What does he want, I wonder?" thought the old gentleman, closing the door as the boy hurried away.

But after reading it he was just as much as ever in the dark.

In a large, business hand, he read these curious and somewhat puzzling lines:

"MR. JOHN MAYFIELD, My Dear Sir: Would like to see you; will call with carriage at 10 A.M. Be ready.

"Respectfully, PERCY WINN."

"Read that and tell me what you think of it," and the old man tossed the mysterious letter to his wife.

"It is perfect nonsense to me," said she, after reading it. "I don't know no more what he means than the man in the moon."

"Neither do I, and I suppose we will hav to wait until he comes for its solution." And then the old couple sat down in silence to await its author's arrival.

However, they had not long to wait, for presently they heard clattering footsteps on the stairs, and Percy stood panting and eager before them.

"Get your things quick! We've a long ways to drive!" gasped he.

"Drive? Drive where?" demanded his old friends in one breath.

"No time for explanation now," cried Percy, breathlessly, hurrying them down-stairs—Mrs. Mayfield with her shawl wrong side outward, and Mr. Mayfield with his hat on crooked. "We're all going to spend Thanksgiving out of town, and my wife is there waiting for us."

"But where?" asked Mr. Mayfield, vainly trying to adjust his hat.

"In the country, to be sure. But come—get in, or we shall be late."

As no satisfactory explanation could be elicited from their young friend, the old couple allowed him to assist them into the carriage, which was waiting at the foot of the stairs.

They went on and on, for ten miles or more, then stopped; and the old people, looking out, recognized Maywood farm.

"Mr. Winn," said Mrs. Mayfield, "we would rather spend Thanksgiving anywhere else than here."

"Oh, nonsense!" returned that young gentleman.

"It recalls old times too vividly," said Mr. Mayfield.

Only the day before both would hav given apything to behold once more the dear old maple-trees and broad meadows; but now they shrank from them with a vague feeling of fear.

And as Percy walked toward the pretty, picturesque, but old-fashioned house, with the aged couple leaning on each arm, they saw the same old swamp, with the same old trees growing alongside, and the same old meadows and fields, all looking just as natural as when heartless Deacon Rochester turned them out of house and home.

"What does all this mean, anyway, Mr. Winn?" asked Mr. Mayfield, at a loss to understand the real motiv in bringing them out here, for he knew his young friend had something else in view than a mere invitation to the country to enjoy a Thanksgiving dinner.

The young man stopped, and took both their hands in his.

"It means, my dear old friends," said he, "that I hav bought the old place back from Deacon Rochester, and am now about to present it to you. It shall be your home for the rest of your days; and Cora and I will visit you often, to look after the farm and see that everything is going right. No, no; no thanks, please; but come along, for here is Cora, waiting to welcome you home."

As Percy paused, the door opened, disclosing to view a roaring wood fire, and a table, spread with blue-edged ware, loaded down with every good thing imaginable, while Cora, all dimples and smiles, stood on the threshold with extended hands.

"Allow me to welcome you home, good old friends," said she, radiantly, grasping each by the hands; "the turkey's done to a turn, and Ann is just about ready to take up the cranberry sauce."

"Am I dreaming, or am I not," asked old Mr. Mayfield, his eyes filling with tears. "Oh, Mrs. Winn, how can we thank you and your kind husband?"

"By accepting this, and saying no more about the matter," and Percy pressed into the old gentleman's hand a legal looking document.

Then the latter thought of what he had told the market-man the day before—that he had nothing to be thankful for; but then he didn't know he would hav a noble and manly heart to thank for a kind and generous gift.

So the sun went down, all red and golden, behind the dear old maple-trees, over the happiest Thanksgiving of the old couple's lives.

"My dear young friend," said Mr. Mayfield to Percy, just before the departure of his generous friends, "will you please tell me what put it in your kind heart to present me with my old property?"

"Yes; it was this," and the young man handed his old friend a little pamphlet, entitled, "The Religion of Humanity."

In less than two months both Mr. Mayfield and his wife were outspoken Freethinkers.

Lexington, Ky. DAVID B. COZINE.

The Rain-drop Patter.

Listen! Listen to the rain-drop
Patter, pattering on the house-top!
Urchins toted off to bed
In the attic overhead;
Little tongues soon cease to clatter
When they hear the rain-drop patter,
Snug in bed and all secure
Under the rafters. To be sure,
They're not lonesome. Ah! they know
Father and mother are just below.
Patter, patter, on the roof,
On the shingles, water-proof.
"My! It lightens! How it flashes
Through the windows! Hear the crashes
Of the thunder! Hear it roar,
Raining harder! Hear it pour!
Let it roar and let it rain;
We're not scared, are we, Jane?"
Oh, the music in the rain-drop
Patter! Pattering on the house-top,
Patter, patter in the dark,
On the highway, in the park,
On the land and on the water,
O'er the landscape, patter, patter.

Fainter rolls the rumbling sound,
As if 'twere echoing underground,
And showers so copious just before
Are waning and will soon be o'er—
Will soon subside till not a drop
Can patter upon the old house-top.
The pattering done, the thunderings cease,
And all is quiet, all is peace.
O pattering rain, thou'lt come again,
And charm us with thy rich refrain.
With grateful hearts it shall be ours
To profit by the welcome showers,
Whose patter upon the house-top thrills
Recipient souls, inspires, and fills
A void—perchance ignored before—
Till many hearts are en rapport.

B. F. R.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—PALINDROMIC RIDDLE.

There is a lady known to fame,
Forward or backward spell her name;
Now, rodents, you must bear in mind
This lady she was very kind.
Although she lived for quite a while,
I cannot say she dressed in style.
She had no sister and no brother,
And all the people called her mother.

Altoona, Pa. WILLIAM J. BURNS.

2.—ENIGMA.

In new, not in old;
In silver, not in gold;
In cold, not in shiver;
In stream, not in river;
In son, not in daughter;
In land, not in water;
My whole was one of England's greatest admirals. GEORGE M. BATESON.

ARITHMETICAL.

B D J) A G A J I(J F G
A D G

G J J
B D J

F J D I
F J D I

The above is an example in long division; each letter represents a figure. Giv the work in its figures. PENN, ESQ.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, NOV. 14, 1885.

1.—1. Marc, cram. 2. Lias, sail. 3. Bank, knab.

2. May, lily (Ma-y, lil-y).

3. He is led (lead).

Solvers: I. A. Pool, Kate Branton.

D. B. Cozine writes:

"I think you conduct your department in an excellent manner and to the satisfaction of all, and the children, no doubt, enjoy the good things you furnish each week."

[We thank our friend for his kind appreciation of our efforts. It is a satisfaction to us to know that our friends think we are doing our work well, and we shall always endeavor to merit their approbation as well as the love of the children who find interest and amusement in our Corner. In another column may be found a pleasant story of a genuin Thanksgiving.—ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

FORT BUFORD, D. T. Oct. 20, 1885.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: I will not ask you to pardon this intrusion, for, if it be unwelcome, such a request could not make it any more to be desired. My only excuse is that I hav been reading the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1885, and your article on the "Relation of Childhood to Freethought" particularly attracted my attention.

You hav struck the keynote.

To build any kind of Liberal structure that shall endure, we must hav a solid foundation. I take it that the movement of the world for upwards of two thousands years has been retrograde. From the burning of Ptolemy's library to the eighteenth century, the true Liberalism had but few lights, and the fog of superstition and rascality surrounding these so thick that they were often obscured or put out. But in Paine, Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, and their supporters, we had a galaxy whose light yet shines for us, and indicates the road we are to take.

The world is yet nearly two thousand years behind time, and the progress we make today will be of no avail if the children do not take it up to-morrow.

You are doing your part well, very well. If I were addressing a man I should say, "Long may you wave."

In the latter part of the ANNUAL for 1885 is an advertising notice of the town of Liberal, Missouri. I had heard of the place before, and once saw an article in a leading paper which, to say the least, was not complimentary to the place nor its people. I would be glad to learn the address of some reliable person at or near this town, who would tell me facts about the place. Should you know of such a one you would confer a favor by sending address to undersigned. ERNEST ELWIN.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever.

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers
To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A
MISSIONARY DOCUMENT
IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM:
Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
Tho Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

POCKET ATLAS
of the
WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes. Twenty-five cents per copy.

Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Thirty cents each.

Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all the schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25.

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00.

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTHSEEKER.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Price, 60 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.
BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular
Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible
Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medi
Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cure
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and liberat
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young me
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interestin

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the
Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

READ ADDISON

Poetry.

A Story of Fredericksburg.

It was after the battle of Fredericksburg;
The ground was strewn with the fallen foe,
They lay in ranks on the side of the hill
With their front to us; and a boy could throw
A stone to the nearest rank, so close
Had they pushed their way to the frowning edge
Of our rifle pits in the last mad charge,
When they struck our lines like an angry sledge,
And fought up under the very guns
Till the blue line wavered, and turned, and broke,
And the stragglers sullenly disappeared
Behind the mantle of pitying smoke.

There was one tall man in the nearest rank,
So tall he had towered above the rest,
As we watched him bearing the tattered flag.
He lay with a rifle ball through his breast.
We thought him dead, but he turned at last,
And raised himself on his elbow there,
And looked down over the bloody field
Then back at us in a fierce despair.
We saw him fumble beneath his coat,
And feebly draw with a shaking hand
A little package of letters stained
With use and tied with a faded band.

He spread them out, and he picked up one,
The smallest letter of all the store.
We knew that his eyes were filled with tears
That blotted the tiny packet o'er.
He tried to read, but his head dropped low,
On his breast, and his hand fell nervelessly;
But the stiffening fingers still kept their grasp
On the words that his eyes could no longer see.

A murmur ran through the rifle pits;
We had watched him there from our sheltered stand;
We fell to wondering whose hand had traced
The letter he held in his big, brown hand.
"His wife!" said one; "No, his sweetheart, boys!"
Said another. "His mother!" said one, whose face
Was fresh and fair as a girl's; he dropped
His gun and clambered from out the place.

He ran to the dead man's side and raised
The hand, and there in a childish scrawl
Was written: "I love you, papa dear."
The hand had closed o'er the rest, and all
That had cheered his soul in that lonely place
Was the simple note of a little child,
And yet it had sweetened the taste of death,
For it seemed to me that the dead man smiled.

—Herbert W. Collingwood, in the Sun.

One More Good Man Sleeps.

The last and best office we can perform for our friends who go from us is to put on record their virtues and good deeds, so they may stand, not only as a memory of the beloved one, but as a shining example for all who may come after.

Strong, fearless, and independent Liberals are so few in this part of the old dominion that when one is developed and maintains his integrity amid such unfavorable surroundings, it is meet that his name and character be put on record as deserving of kindly remembrance.

Peyton Randolph Ross was born and reared in Patrick County, Va., and died there August 15, 1885. He was nearly seventy-two years of age, and was the father of nine living children, all of whom loved, honored, and respected him as one of the best of parents. He was kind and affectionate in his family, and was guide, father, and friend, all in one. He did not believe in punishment as a reformatory measure; but had full faith in a good heredity, backed up by good example and moral teachings. He did not instruct his children in religion, but gave them a good secular education, and grounded them in the truths of nature and the moral philosophies of the day, and showed them, by the little daily deeds of his own life, the value of his teachings.

He was sick but three days, and suffered too much to do a great deal of talking, though he assured them he was dying as he had lived—an Agnostic and a philosopher. When told by Dr. Taylor that "Tom Paine" had recanted and professed religion on his death-bed, he calmly assured the doctor that it was Christian calumny and falsehood—only tales raised by priests, and told for effect; that they had been refuted again and again, and as often resurrected and re-told as a part of their stock in trade.

He had no fear for the future, nor did he fear death. He was a TRUTH SEEKER worshiper, and loved the paper better than anything in this world outside of his own family. He lent out his TRUTH SEEKERS, and gave them to anyone who would read them, preferring to send them out as messengers of light to darkened minds, to even filing them as precious heirlooms for his children's children. He was linked by this love for our paper to the heart of every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and this is why I hav given you a few lines in memoriam.

"Blossoms and branches green to thy grave will we bring;
For fresh as the morning, a song would we chant.
All over bouquets of roses,
O friend! We cover you with roses and early lilies,
But mostly and now the lilac that blooms the first,
Copious we break. We break the sprigs from the bushes,
With loaded arms we come, pausing for you,
For you friend beloved—our sleeping friend."

—Whitman (adapted).

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., Nov. 12, 285.

Tribute to an Old Friend.

Born in Liverpool, England, 1814, died at his home in Scott Township, Steuben county, Indiana, Oct. 7th, 1885, aged 71 years, Thomas Tasker. Funeral services from the residence on Sunday, Oct. 11th, at 11 o'clock A.M., J. H. Burnham, of Michigan, officiating. Our departed brother had a well-cultured mind, had been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for a number of years, had each volume bound and kept for reference; he was one who took great pleasure in the investigation of truth; his mind was unusually clear, and his reasoning powers of the higher order. He was free from the blight of superstition and defects of an early education. He accepted, like an honest man, what his reason approved; he was no slave to mistaken dogmas nor mythological fictions. He accepted the teachings of science as the most reliable facts within the grasp of the human mind; he was untrammeled by the chains of priestly creeds and fables; he sought to know the truth and the right, and embraced them with the full ardor of his nature. He was a kind, indulgent parent, and a warm, devoted friend. He hesitated not to avow his honest convictions; he was a lover of his race; he led a good life. One who leads such a life as our friend has led has no need to fear death nor what may probably follow after it. He dreads no angry being, no vindictiv personage from whom to expect vengeance and wrath. He is perfectly willing to meet the consequences of a well-spent life. If death ends all, as was our friend's belief, if we gently fall into a quiet, peaceful sleep which knows no waking, we are at least free from pain, care, and anxiety. If we hav a continued existence there are no just grounds for apprehending that that other life has any more terrors than this. We will meet the same universe with the same forces and laws; there can not be any other. So whichever belief proves true, whichever is correct, we hav little to fear in the future; it is all right with our old friend who has left; peace be with him. This from his old friend,

Angola, Ind. DR J. H. MOORE.

Book Notices.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS, and Other Lectures. By Helen H Gardener. With an Introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

The above is the title of an unusually interesting book just published by the Truth Seeker Company, N. Y. The general appearance of the book is attractiv—beautifully printed on good paper, with a fine etching of the author as frontispiece; but it is not to write of the external book that I hav taken my pen. The Truth Seeker Company is somewhat famous for sending out to the world good-looking publications, and this book is no exception to its general work; but of the contents of the book I do not hesitate to speak in the highest praise. It is a long, long time since I hav cared much about "the holy scripture." It has seemed to me almost a waste of time to expose its absurdities or notice its obscenities, but Miss Gardener has given us an argument so perfect in its way that even I, who cared so little about it, could not giv up the reading until I had finished the last page. I think the humor of the book, which the reader will find on nearly every page, is one of its great attractions. I wish every Liberal man who has a wife and daughters who persuade him to giv to the church what he ought to giv to the improvement of his fellow-man, would buy a copy of this book, and instead of putting it on the shelf, persistently read it aloud, inviting his wife to take a copy of the Bible and so turn to all the quotations, and convince herself that these quotations are genuin. I'm sure the whole thing would make her ashamed of her advocacy of the "divinity of the scriptures." Woman, like the negro of the South, has bowed down to her oppressor—gloried in her shame! for is it not her shame that she reverences as authority a book which denies her equal rights with man?

Every woman's rights person, man or woman, should possess the book, and if any of our rich friends who wish to help the Secular Society would supply the agents with a large number of them, their distribution would do an immense good. I am rejoiced that Miss Gardener, a young and gifted woman, has taken up this work for woman and against superstition. Some of us, who almost might be said to hav "trodden the wine-press alone," find that age is upon us. Our work is done. It is gratifying to know that such women as our gifted author are to continue the work.

LUCY N. COLMAN.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 13, 1885.

DEAR OLD TRUTH SEEKER: I want to say through your columns how more than delighted I was to receive, with the compliments of the author, the charming book, "Men, Women, and Gods," by our talented lecturer, Miss Helen Gardener.

I hav read it aloud in my family, and the hearty laughs, as well as the useful information, did us good. I wish every Christian woman in the world could read it.

F. C. REYNOLDS,
Sec. N. Y. State Freethinkers' Association.

North Parma, N. Y., Nov. 9, 1885.

Written, delivered, and compiled by Miss Helen H. Gardener, touchingly dedicated to Mrs. Eva Ingersoll, and right royally introduced by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, this book conclusivly shows both by unanswerable argument and historical proof that between the mills of men and gods, woman has been ground into fine dust beneath their feet and wings; that the best qualities of womanly nature hav been narrowed and become morbid through long ages of social, governmental, and religious restriction and oppression, and that the systems enforcing such conditions hav not only begotten moral evil and degeneracy to women, but, like any and every other form of serfdom or slavery, hav generated rottenness in society and homes, instability to governments, and the grossest hypocrisy, and cant, and persecution in religious institutions, all of which, if not working absolute moral death to their propagators and upholders, hav at least, as always, le t them in a worse condition than their unfortunate subjects.

The accompanying portrait of this brave little lady—who has dared face the lions of theology in their lair, or rather, who stands at the mouth of their dens where she is not permitted to enter, but with sweet, unfaltering voice utters her protest—scarce does her justice. Upon close inspection, however, a friend can discover those fine lines about the eyes and mobile mouth, indicativ of the wit and humor with which she treats the absurdities and incongruities of man-made governments nd religions, while, even in a wood-cut, the large, soulful brown eye speaks for itself.

The critics of the press unite in an alliterativ term for this modern representativ American young woman, "Heathen Helen!" But the Chicago Inter-Ocean compares her to "Hypatia, of old Alexandrian days, who was sacrificed to fanaticism and intolerance, but whom men went to hear by the thousands, and marveled at her words." LEWISE OLIVER.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM. The Present and the Future Republic of North America. By a Capitalist. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price, $1.50.

We hav read every word of this volume of five hundred pages with very much more interest than we anticipated when we took it up—in fact, with increasing interest from the first to the last word.

The author of these pages, being a capitalist, was not driven into this investigation as hundreds of others are, by pinching want driving him to seek some way out; but as a man of wealth and leisure, he could not help but observe the difference between the rich and the poor. Why one party, neither industrious nor frugal, should become very wealthy, and another, intelligent, honest, industrious, and temperate in all his habits, continued, in spite of all his exertions, to be poor, was a problem he sought to solve. Day and night he meditated on the various questions which continually ask themselvs concerning our social relations, and the final come-out, if things go on as they are now going. For days his mind had been absorbed in trying to solve the causes of inequalities everywhere existing when, in June, 1880, a vision was presented to him and was continued night after night for ten consecutiv nights until he saw the whole earth as he supposes it will be in the Republic of the Future. During the day previous to the first instalment of this vision he had visited some of the homes and the workshops of the most abject poor. He had looked upon such anguish of heart, squalor, poverty, degradation, misery, and emaciation as he had never seen in his life before. He had also been invited to a brilliant and fashionable wedding among the "meek and lowly followers" of the original Communist.

The gorgeousness of the splendid extravagance displayed among these followers of the "meek and lowly" put his mind in the right condition to be the recipient of what was to follow.

In the first vision he seemed to be lifted about a thousand feet in the air, and found himself in company with a sweet-faced, venerable old man with snow-white locks and a full beard. He wore a long white robe, with a cord around his waist. This old man's commission was to show him the future of the world, but more particularly of North America. During ten consecutiv nights this was done. By way of contrast, however, this venerable old gentleman, whom we strongly suspect to be old Father Time, never misses an opportunity to represent before him things as they are to-day. The contrast is kept up so vividly that the reader carries both sides of the question in his mind from first to last.

First he describes the external appearance of New York city, then the state, then the whole Mississippi Valley, then the whole continent as it could be, and as he sees it will be under the coming republic.

If the world can ever reach the place he saw in his vision, it will be a much more desirable place than a Christian could ever imagin his heaven to be. To describe it would require a series of lengthy articles. It can be done in but few less words than are found in the book itself.

In that vision, however, he saw no churches, temples, prisons, or court-buildings. They were absolutely unnecessary. Crime was unknown, and man had learned that temples for religious worship exclusivly were unnecessary. His description of our present pell-mell, pugnis et calcibus way of living is not the least interesting portion of the book.

The New Republic is not only grand for what it contains in its farms, schools, institutions, communes, villages, and cities, but it is quite as remarkable for what it does not contain. Among the things he could not find in it we summarize the following:

1. Custom-houses, or bonded warehouses, as the word is, under the new order, are gone, and all are brethren; no tariffs were collected, therefore no such institutions were needed.

2. Banking houses and brokers' offices were non est. Wall street was literally wiped out.

3. Such respectable gambling-houses as stock exchanges, produce exchanges, and boards of trade were numbered with the things that were.

4. Life, health, and fire insurance companies could not liv.

5. There were no court-buildings or prisons, with their appendages of lawyers, judges, juries, sheriffs, clerks, and hangers-on in general.

6. The little petty stores that now crowd each other so in our large cities had all given place to the new order of things.

7. Not one grog-shop in all the New Republic.

8. Private and distinct swell family residences were all gone.

9. Church edifices had given place to that which was useful.

It would take a volume no smaller than the one under review to tell what took the place of all these. The author illustrates the failures in our private property system as follows:

"Suppose that a thousand men were desirous of reaching Liverpool; suppose there were no vessels to convey them, and then, instead of uniting their efforts, building a ship and going together, each should build a canoe for himself and undertake to paddle himself across. This would be precisely analagous, as I view it, to the present plan of each striving to make his own way in the world, regardless, in a great measure, of the rest. Nine-tenths of those who should thus set out to cross the ocean in their individual canoes would be likely to come to grief. And so, by their independent course, an equal portion fail of their purpose in the pursuit of the comforts and joys of life."

Those interested in the subject this book introduces will find this the most readable work yet issued on the questions it discusses.—New Thought.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.

INCLUDING

Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.

Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

A PHOTOGRAPH

OF THE BIBLE'S FLAT EARTH AND SOLID HEAVEN.

A Picture of the world as described in Genesis, with the texts of the Bible teaching the doctrin, and the passages from profane writer supporting it. Price 25 cents

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark,' "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECRIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

SABBATH-BREAKING.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

AUTHOR OF "LIFE OF PAINE," "FALSE CLAIMS," "BIBLE MORALS," ETC.

This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view.

LARGE AND HANDSOME PRINT.

The question is discussed under the following heads:

Origin of the Sabbatic Idea—The Jewish Sabbath—The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath—Examination of Sunday Arguments—Origin of Christian Sabbath—Testimony of the Christian Fathers—The Sabbath during the Middle Ages—The Puritan Sabbath—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines—Abrogation of Sunday Laws.

Price, 25 Cents; Six Copies, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT
AND
THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

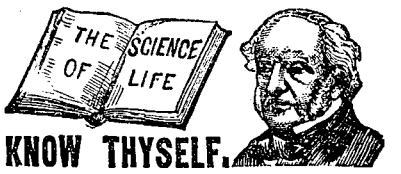
BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenitv.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00



Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator Stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem-wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humpug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N. Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Gems of Thought.

I AM able to report but little Freethought in Scotland. Presbyterianism obtained a strong foothold here, and it is intensely inimical to free and Liberal thought. When I meet a man in such surroundings who has the intelligence and courage to be independent, it does me much good.—D. M. Bennett.

TO THOSE who do see the cogency of the evidences of modern physiology and modern psychology in this direction, it is a very serious thing to consider that not only the earth itself, and all that beautiful face of nature we see, but also the living things upon it, and all the consciousness of men and the ideas of society which hav grown up upon the surface, must come to an end. We who hold that belief must just face the fact and make the best of it; and I think we are helped in this by the words of that Jew philosopher who was himself a worthy crown to the splendid achievements of his race in the cause of progress during the Middle Ages, Benedict Spinoza. He said, "The free man thinks of nothing so little as of death, and his wisdom is a meditation—not of death, but of life." Our interest lies with so much of the past as may serve to guide our actions in the present, and to intensify our pious allegiance to the fathers who hav gone before us, and the brethren who are with us; and our interest lies with so much of the future as we may hope will be appreciably affected by our good actions now. Beyond that, as it seems to me, we do not know, and we ought not to care. Do I seem to say, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die?" Far from it; on the contrary, I say, "Let us take hands and help, for this day we are alive together."—Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford's The First and Last Catastrophe.

HAV you never seen the righteous forsaken, and his seed begging bread? I see it every day of my life. You may never hav known it; the psalmist may never hav met with it in his experience, but there is no man who walks the streets of New York on any day of any week, of any month, of any year, who does not see a hundred instances. . . . I know men and women who hav been made better by adversity, who hav glorified by it; but for every one of them, I know ten who hav been crushed by it—soured, embittered, made utterly dejected, and completely prostrated by it.—Frothingham's Consolations of Rationalism.

BLASPHEMY is a misdemeanor at common law, and is held to include "any denial of the truth of Christianity in general, or of the existence of God, whether the terms of such publications be decent or otherwise," or "any contemptuous reviling, or ludicrous matter relating to God, Jesus Christ, or the Bible, or the formularies of the Church of England as by law established." Under the statute, it is blasphemy "to deny any one of the persons in the holy trinity to be God, or to deny the Christian religion to be true, or the holy scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be divine authority." By this statute, were it equally applied, all the authors of heretical books, and the publishers and printers of such, are liable to imprisonment—Huxley, Tyndall, Colenso, Herbert Spencer, F. W. Newman, Miss Cobbe, Swinburne, Lecky, Froude, Leslie Stephen, Stopford Brooke, Charles Voysey, the Duke of Somerset, the Marquis of Queenberry, James Martineau, and all the Unitarians and the Positivists; and equally the publishers of the works of Mill, Darwin, Clifford, Carlyle, Emerson, Sir George Cox, and a host of others.—M. D. Conway (Index, Aug. 31, 1882).

HUME argues that if the faculties with which we are endowed are unable to discover a future state, and if the most attentiv consideration of their nature serves to show that they are adapted to this life and nothing more, it is surely inconsistent with any conception of justice that we should be dealt with as if we had had, all along, a clear knowledge of the fact thus carefully concealed from us. What should we think of the justice of a father who gave his son every reason to suppose that a trivial fault would only be visited by a box on the ear; and then, years afterward, put back for a week for the same fault?—Huxley's Hume.

HEAR the verbal protestations of all men: nothing so certain as their religious tenets. Examin their lives: you will scarcely think that they repose the smallest confidence in them. Their greatest and truest zeal givs us no securiiy against hypocrisy: the most open impiety is attended with a secret dread and compunction. . . . The whole is a riddle, an enigma, an inexplicable mystery. Doubt, uncertainty, suspense of judgment, appear the only result of our most accurate scrutiny concerning this subject. But such is the frailty of human reason, and such the irresistible contagion of opinion, that even this deliberate doubt could scarcely be upheld, did we not enlarge our views, and, opposing one species of superstition to another, set them a quarreling; while we ourselvs, during their fury and contention, happily make our escape into the calm, though obscure, regions of philosophy.—Hume's Natural History of Religion.

THE more a statement of fact conflicts with previous experience, the more complete must be the evidence which is to justify us in believing it. It is upon this principle that everyone carries on the business of common life. If a man tells me he saw a piebald horse in Piccadilly, I believe him without any hesitation. The thing itself is likely enough, and there is no imaginable motiv for his deceiving me. But if the same person tells me that he observed a zebra there, I hesitate a little about accepting his testimony. But if he tells me that he beheld a centaur trotting down that famous thoroughfare, I should emphatically decline to credit his statement; and this, even if he were the most saintly of men and ready to suffer martyrdom in support of his belief.—Huxley's Hume.

O DEATH! the poor man's dearest friend,
The kindest and the best!
Welcome the hour, my aged limbs
Are laid with thee at rest!

The great, the wealthy, fear thy blow,
From pomp and pleasures torn!
But oh, a blest relief to those
That weary-laden mourn!

—Burns' Man Was Made to Mourn.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES.	RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.
Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By Robert C. Adams.
Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Odds and Ends.

HELLEBORE will kill currant worms just as it did before the new version.

"IF I cannot hav the fat of the land I can take a little lean," said a tramp, as he rested against a lamp-post.

"AH, that's a grave mistake," remarked the boss resurrectionist, when his assistant dug into the wrong hole.

"WAS Rome founded by Romeo?" inquired a pupil of the teacher. "No, my son," replied the wise man. "It was Juliet who was found dead by Romeo."

THE musicians of England hav held a convention to agree on a standard pitch. We ought to hav one in this country, and hav a law to enforce it at camp-meetings.

GOING security for a relativ is a good deal like licking a red-hot poker with the tongue. There is nothing to be gained, and only about one man in a million can do it without being scorched.

"ABANDON the direct progression to the straight thitherward, and devote by inclinatory and aberrant dextrogyration into a dextral incidence." They were Boston oxen and they promptly "gee'd."

"SMITH, did you see my wife go down this street?" "Yes, she passed about an hour ago." "Wonder what my chances are for overtaking her?" "Good. The sidewalk is just lined with show windows."

AN English paper reports that, during recent explorations at Nineveh, a petrified umbrella was found in one of the temples. Near by was the petrified man who was just about to make off with it.

As a drug clerk the female is not a brilliant success. When you wink at her across a soda fountain she doesn't know whether to put a little "Balm of Gilead" in your soda, or hang her head and blush.

AN eight-year-old Brooklyn boy, the other day, after a few moments spent in deep study, turned to his mother and asked: "Ma, don't you think we'd better send word that we don't want any more children?"

IN the celebrated dialog which occurred between Alexander and the robber, the latter explained that he stole from the rich to giv to the poor. Our modern charity fairs are conducted upon the same principles.—Boston Transcript.

A GENTLEMAN who was habitually guilty of liberties with the queen's English was returned as a member for a colonial parliament. Delighted with the importance of his new position, he rose, on the first chance that offered, to make his maiden speech. "Gentlemen," he said, by way of introduction, "what 'av we before the 'ouse to-night?" "I think we hav h before 'ouse, gentlemen," was the prompt reply of a member of the opposition.

"FOR goodness's sake, Mary," asked the young lady's mother at breakfast, "what was the matter with you and Harry in the parlor last night? You jowered and quarreled for half an hour like a pair of pickpockets." "Oh," she replied, "Harry wanted me to take the big chair, and I wanted him to take it because he was company, you know." "How did you settle it, finally?" "Well, mamma, we—we—we compromised and both of us took it."

AT one of the stations of the San Francisco and North Pacific Railroad a few Sundays since an elderly man got off the cars to take brief observations during the stoppage of the train. The assistant at the station rushed out and made a regular baggage-smasher's a tack on a trunk, which he slammed about with a reckless disregard for consequences. The old man interposed: "Young man, won't you break that trunk?" The "young man" turned a withering look upon the old gentleman, and impudently inquired: "What's the matter with you? Do you own this trunk?" "No, sir!" came back in a tone that evinced much indignation, "but I'll hav you to understand, sir, that I own this railroad." As President Donahue moved back to the train the limp young man reclined against the station for support.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 49. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, December 5, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A NEW sect has sprung up in Canada whose doctrin is that women hav no souls, because the Bible nowhere mentions women angels. The leader is a Frenchman.

A GIFTED poetess writes: "The devil arose from his little bed, and washed his face and combed his head." We hope not to be considered profane if we ask where in hell he got his water?—New York Graphic.

THE Episcopalians are trying to inaugurate a revival of religion among workingmen. Thus far the workingman does not take to the scheme with very marked avidity. A meeting called at Clarendon Hall last Saturday evening was a dismal failure.

THE Andre monument affair has had the effect of putting Mr. Field before the British public in a light he may not relish. The London Echo writes of him as "an able, pushing man of business, not too scrupulous to jeopardize success, but, on the other hand, exceedingly vain and fond of associating his name with persons of eminence and rank, more especially in this country."

A WRITER in our orthodox theological contemporary the Homiletic Review (Rev. Dr. Funk, editor) says that clergymen are victims of dyspepsia, "firstly, because clergymen are physically the laziest people in the world, and secondly, because many of them are invited to eat big dinners." This is a strange revelation for a theological magazine whose circulation is wholly among the orthodox clergy.—John Swinton.

"I AM very tired," said the lady at the head of the boarding-house table, Monday morning, to the good natured minister who sat at the other end. "You should not be," said the parson; "you didn't preach a sermon yesterday." "No," said the lady, almost unconsciously, "but I listened to one." Then followed an oppressiv silence, which gave the minister time to reflect that he had come out only second best.

THE Boston Herald says: "Whatever is noble and generous and just in society finds its reflection in the columns of the press, and it carries its incitements to virtue and goodness where too few modern clergymen are found—in the abodes of poverty and sin and suffering. People who are too poor to go to church are not too poor to buy a newspaper, and they can winnow the wheat from the chaff in chairs as well as they could in pews."

PROFESSOR SUMNER, of Yale, says a good thing once in a while. "People talk about the rights of parents," said he, the other day, "and the duty of the child, but I tell you that a man who is the cause of his child's existence owes the child everything instead of being owed everything by the child. Birth is a dire misfortune for many children, and their parents cannot do enough for them in return for the inherited disease and misfortunes which they bestow upon them."

PRIME MINISTER ESTRUP of Denmark is credited with a long cherished design to imitate Prince Bismarck in his anti-Socialistic policy, and Rasmusser's attempt on his life will giv him a good excuse to begin the work. The leading Danish Socialist paper sells twenty-two thousand copies a day, and it is remarkable that Socialism is found equally among the rural and urban populations. The former assisted the latter by giving a home gratis to their children during a recent great strike.

THE state of religious affairs at Lake George, as reported by Rev. Chauncey Giles, is not encouraging. The Episcopal church is the most flourishing of any, but it is open only three months in the year. The Baptist church is a desolate looking building, seating 150 people. The minister was an earnest and hard working man, but they starved him out. The Presbyterian church is larger than the Baptist, but it makes little difference how large it is, for it has not been opened for years, and is going to decay. Mr. Giles says that the doctrins held by the Lake George people are as rusty as their churches.

GOVERNOR CURRIER'S Thanksgiving proclamation, which is as liberal as his own religious views, and omits the usual phrases like "Thanksgiving to Almighty God," and neglects to call upon the people to observe the day in places of worship, did not suit the New Hampshire ministers. Many read Cleveland's proclamation Sunday, and others read and criticised the governor's. Governor Currier merely proclaimed the day as one of Thanksgiving, recreation, and rejoicing.—Springfield Republican.

A MAN living at Toronto, Can., recently got up what he called a temperance beverage, and named it Blue Ribbon beer. For some time it was noticed that several old topers left off drinking the death-dealing rum and took to the new drink as naturally as a duck takes to water, and their friends were glad to see the change. At last some one came to the front and claimed that the Blue Ribbon beer was just as intoxicating as any other. Finally a test was made upon two men, who after drinking seven glasses became howling drunk and offered to lick any two men in the town. The men were taken home in a hack, and the court decided that Blue Ribbon beer was intoxicating.—Peck's Sun.

DURING the month of December a celebration will be held at Philadelphia under the auspices of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of the introduction of the art of printing into the middle colonies of North America. On the evening of Dec. 11th George Dana Boardman will deliver an address in the hall of the Historical Society, and on the following evening a dinner will be given in the same place, to which will be invited from other cities representativs of all branches of the craft. In Philadelphia much that relates to the advancement of printing had its origin. It was there that, in 1685, William Bradford set up his press. In December, that year, he gave to the public his first venture, an almanac for the year 1686.

THE Dublin Mail recently published the following communication from a correspondent: "I inclose a copy of an inscription in medieval Latin from a stone discovered during the excavations now proceeding at Cork Hill, near which stood a church dedicated to a saint and missionary known to the chroniclers by the name of Uncatus Ambulans. The inscription is as follows:

"I 'SABILLI-HŒRES' AGO
'FORTIBUS' ES IN. ARO
NOSCES 'MARI 'THEBE 'TRUX
'VOTIS 'INNEM . . . PES 'AN DUX.'"

Upon this the Freeman's Journal observes that, though not versed in antiquarian lore, it offers a translation which may suit all purposes. Here it is:

"I say, Billy, here's a go,
Forty 'busses in a row
No, says Mary, they be trucks.
What is in 'em? Peas and ducks."

THE Granada correspondent of the London Times thus describes the treatment for cholera by the pious people of Spain, and how the same people are humbugged by the priests: "The Te Deum was sung, and a grand procession of the patron Virgin elicited an enthusiastic display of wild fanaticism. An image of the virgin, which is supposed by the ignorant to be endowed with supernatural power, was carefully confined in its church while the epidemic continued to devastate the town. The clergy were implored to bring out the image, for its presence in the streets would assuredly suffice to dispel the cholera. They, however, allowed the death-rate to reach its maximum, and waited patiently till the number of new cases was so small that they did not equal the number of deaths resulting from previous attacks. When it thus became evident that the epidemic had reached its last stage, la Patrona de Granada was taken in solemn procession up to the cathedral. In this manner the cessation of the cholera is associated in the popular mind with the appearance of the image. To render the connection all the more clear, the statue was brought back to its church after the Te Deum had been sung in the cathedral, and public thanks thus rendered for the termination of the epidemic. To make this lesson all the more effectiv, the procession, which might hav been concluded in half an hour, was prolonged for four or five hours and late into the night. This supplied the pretext for the display of illuminations, fireworks, and the firing of rockets along the whole route followed by the statue. The people, many of whom imagined that they had been saved from cholera by this very image, cheered wildly, uncovered themselvs, knelt in the mud, and otherwise displayed the most fanatical frenzy."

JOSEPH COOK says: "I hav seen around this globe characters attaining to final permanence, crystallizing into the love of what God loves and the hate of what God hates, without the knowledge of the historic Christ." If this is true, says a ministerial correspondent of the Christian Union, "it is the most damaging argument against foreign missions offered to an American audience in the history of the American board. To those of us who for years past hav been trying to open men's eyes to the need of heathendom and our duty it is like a wet blanket thrown over our zeal."

THE Charleston (S. C.) News says: "A letter of our Beaufort correspondent describes a deplorable condition of morals and manners among the colored people on the Sea Islands. What is most needed perhaps, as our correspondent shows, is an earnest campaign against immorality. There is no lack of 'religion,' even in the most benighted districts, but it is unfortunately true that it is not always a kind of religion that conflicts with a low view of morals on the part of many who are churchgoers. If left to themselvs, the colored people on the islands will sink to the lowest level of degradation within a few generations, and it is, therefore, incumbent upon their friends, North and South, to look more closely after them than heretofore."

"OUR Lord God Almighty! O most merciful father! Thou has shed thy loving beam upon me. Thou has plucked a brand from burning. Thou hast washed my sins away in the precious blood of thine only begotten son, Jesus Christ, whose blood was an atonement for my sins, and not only mine, but the sins of the whole world. And O God, our father, I pray thee that thou wouldst open the doors of love to sinners standing here this day to show them thy loving kindness and tender mercy, and that thou canst strengthen them, and that thou will be with them to the last. And O God, our father, I know that thou art with me and in my presence this moment, and I commend myself to thee through the blood of Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanseth from all iniquity." The foregoing prayer is not the performance of a dying saint going peacefully down the valley of the shadow after a well-spent life. It embodies the closing words of B. Simmonds, hanged in London, Ont., Nov. 27th, for murdering his paramour by stabbing her half a dozen times.

IN an interview with a Sun correspondent, Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, member elect for Northampton, said: "Personally I believe I stand a better chance of being permitted to take my seat under the Tory government, which is likely to remain in power, than ever I would hav under Mr. Gladstone's cabinet. My sympathy for Mr. Gladstone has tied my hands, and I frequently snuffed myself out to avoid harming his party. I hav no reason to spare the Tory government. I am able to bring against it every kind of weapon, including what might be called street-forces. Hitherto my display has been made peacefully in Trafalgar square." Mr. Bradlaugh, continuing, said he had caused the defeat of twenty Liberals by running Radicals in the same districts, because he preferred Tory to Whig opponents. He declined to divulge his plans as to the future, stating that he had hitherto damaged his cause by prematurely divulging what he intended doing. "I shall," he said, "observe absolute secrecy in the future toward friend and foe alike." The Sun's correspondent's impression is that Mr. Bradlaugh will swear in with the first batch of members elect offering themselvs to take the oath of office.

News of the Week.

KING ALPHONSO of Spain died on the 25th ult.

THE Grant monument fund has turned $100,000.

THE Prohibitionists carried the city of Atlanta, Ga., by a majority of 224.

CANON FARRAR'S farewell lecture took place at the Academy of Music in this city Thursday evening, Dec. 3d.

SEVERAL prominent Socialists are on trial at Warsaw charged with attempting the life of the czar of Russia.

THE government report to the Reichstag in Berlin announces with regret that Socialism is rapidly spreading in Europe.

THE belligerent Servians and Bulgarians are resting on their arms under an armistice. Austria had threatened armed intervention.

EIGHT Indians were hanged at Battleford in the Northwest Territory on the 27th ult. to atone for the massacre at Frog Lake last April.

A HEAVY easterly storm flooded the riverside streets of New York last week and did great damage to wharves and shipping along the coast.

THANKSGIVING day was observed in the usual manner, although the death of Vice-President Hendricks made the idea of any espscial rejoicing rather repugnant to the thoughtful patriot.

THREE men were killed outright last Saturday by falling down a shaft on the new Croton aqueduct in Westchester county, N. Y., a distance of 150 feet. A fourth workman was seriously injured by being struck by one of the falling men.

EXPERIMENTS hav recently been made at Fort Lafayette, near New York, with a dynamite gun, i. e., a gun which fires dynamite cartridges. The gun is about fifty feet long, with an eight-inch bore. It is charged with compressed air, and throws one hundred pounds of dynamite a distance of two miles. The cartridge explodes when it strikes.

IN making a genuflexion in a New London, Conn., church last week a man ruptured the muscles attached to the knee-pans of both legs. He rose, tottered a few steps, fell, and was unable to rise. The physicians are of opinion that he will be confined to his house for at least three months, and fear that he will never recover the full use of his legs.

THE Rev. Mr. Conkling, of New York, is now getting aired through the newspapers. It appears that he induced Widow Mary J. Morgan to endow him previous to her death with about one million dollars in stocks and property. His relations to the late Mrs. Morgan he refuses to talk about. There are said to be some letters in existence which greatly compromise the Rev. Mr. Conkling.

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, vice-president of the United States, died suddenly of paralysis at Indianapolis, Ind., on Wednesday, Nov. 25th, aged 66 years. Mr. Hendricks was born at Zanesville, O., Sept. 7, 1819. He was elected to the Indiana legislature in 1848, and to Congress in 1851. He was appointed commissioner of the general land office in 1854 by President Polk. In 1860 he ran for governor of Indiana on the Democratic ticket and was defeated. He was opposed to the civil war, being what was termed a "copperhead." In 1863 he became a United States senator. He defended President Johnson in the impeachment trial of the latter, and was a prominent candidate for president in 1868 when Seymour was nominated. In 1872 he was elected governor of Indiana, and nominated for vice-president of the United States in 1876, being defeated with Samuel J. Tilden, who was candidate for the presidency, but in the last presidential election he was successful and was inaugurated vice-president on the 4th of March. His record is unsullied by any charge of official corruption. Among the candidates for the position of successor to Mr. Hendricks, Edmunds, Sherman, and Logan are the most prominent.

Communications.

Some Thoughts of Science.

We all know, and I trust we all love, the names of Liberty, Equality, and Brotherhood. We feel, I trust, that these words are too beautiful not to represent true and just ideas, and that therefore they will come true and be fulfilled some when, somewhere, somehow. It may be in a shape very different from that which you or I or any man expects, but still they will be fulfilled.

But if they are to come true, it is we, the individual men, who must help them to come true for the whole world, by practicing them ourselvs when and where we can. And I tell you in becoming scientific men, in studying science and acquiring the scientific habit of mind, you will find yourself enjoying a freedom, an equality, a brotherhood, such as you will not find elsewhere just now.

Freedom! what do we want freedom for? For this at least: That we may be each and all able to think what we choose, and to say what we choose also, providing we do not say it rudely or violently, so as to provoke a breach of the peace. That was Mr Buckle's definition of freedom of speech. That was the only limit to it which he would allow, and I think that that is Mr. John Stuart Mill's limit also. . . . . But what I complain of is, that when men hav got the freedom, three out of four will not use it. "What!" some one will answer, "do you suppose that I will not say what I choose, and that I dare not speak my own mind to any man?" Doubtless, but are you sure first that you think what you choose, or only what some one else chooses for you? Are you sure that you make up your own mind before you speak, or let some one else make it up for you? Your speech may be free enough, my good friend, and heaven forbid that it should be anything else. But are your thoughts free likewise? Are you sure that, though you may hate bigotry in others, you are not somewhat of a bigot yourself? . . . . You should ask yourself that question seriously and often, Are my thoughts really free? . . . I say it deliberately as a student of society and history. Power will pass more and more if all goes healthily and well into the hands of scientific men—into the hands of those who hav made due use of that great heirloom which the philosophers of the seventeenth century left for the use of future generations, and especially of the Teutonic race.

Thus writes the Rev. Charles Kingsley, canon of the English church of Chester; and in view of the position taken by the church in times past, I am glad to note such Liberal sentiments from so eminent a representativ. And what is science? The above authority, quoting Huxley, says it is "only common sense well regulated," and to learn science we should "always try to explain the unknown by the known." "Suppose, for instance, that you found a dead bird on the top of a cathedral tower, and were asked how you thought it had got there. You would say 'of course it died there.' But if a friend said, 'Not so, it dropped from a balloon or from the clouds,' and told you the prettiest tale of how the bird came to so strange an end, you would answer, 'Not so. I must reason from what I know; I know that birds haunt the cathedral tower, I know that birds die, and therefore let your story be as pretty as it may, my common sense bids me take the simplest explanation and say it died there.' In saying that you would be talking scientifically; you would hav made a fair and sufficient induction from the facts about birds' habits and birds' death which you knew. But suppose that when you took the bird up you found that it was neither a jackdaw nor a sparrow, nor a swallow, as you expected, but a humming-bird. Then you would be adrift again. The fact of its being a humming-bird would be a new fact, which you had not taken into account and for which your old explanation was not sufficient, and you would hav to try a new induction, to use your common sense afresh, saying, 'I hav not to explain merely how a dead bird got there, but a dead humming-bird;' and now your imaginativ friend chimes in, 'Do you not see I am right after all? Do you not see that it fell from the clouds, that it was swept away hither all the way from South America by some southwesterly storm, and, wearied out at last, dropped here to find rest in a sacred place?' You would answer, 'My friend, that is a beautiful imagination, but I must treat it only as such as long as I can explain the mystery more simply by facts which I do know. I do not know that humming-birds can be blown across the Atlantic alive. I do know that they are actually brought across the Atlantic dead—are stuck in ladies' hats—I know that ladies visit the cathedral, and, odd as the accident is, I prefer to believe, till I get a better explanation, that the humming-bird has simply dropped out of a lady's hat.' There again you would be speaking common sense and using, too, sound inductiv method trying to explain what you do not know from what you do know already."

Nature is but another name for cause and effect. All we see and feel and know are effects produced by natural causes, and these causes are the effects of some preceding cause, links in the grand chain which reaches back to "the beginning of things." The elements of nature, of which the chemist has counted some sixty odd, and all matter, vegetable, animal, mineral, or atmospheric, visible and invisible, which fills all space, are of or composed of these elements which can neither be created nor destroyed. Though "final ruin fiercely drives his plowshare o'er creation," and the world itself be "consumed in fervent heat," and a mighty explosion scatter its ashes throughout space, not one atom of all its matter would be destroyed; and Dr. Joule, of England, demonstrated that not only matter but force or energy is equally indestructible, showing, according to Professor Roscoe, that "heat is only a form of motion;" "a fixed and definit quantity of heat can be got from a given amount of mechanical force and vice versa;" "that the quantity of heat obtained by any mechanical action is directly proportional to the amount of mechanical force expended; that by the fall of 772 pounds through a space of one foot, heat is always generated sufficient to raise the temperature of 1 pound of water 1° Fahrenheit." Newton, observing the fall of the apple, traced out and established the law of gravitation—"proved," as Professor Tyndall says, "that only did the sun attract the earth and the earth attract the sun as a whole, but that every particle of the sun attracts every particle of the earth, and the reverse. His conclusion was that the attraction of the masses was simply the sum of the attractions of their . . . constituent particles," and "he familiarized the world with the conceptions of molecular force."

But it remained for John Dalton, the poor schoolmaster of Manchester, to place the atomic theory in the list of demonstrated facts. This theory, introduced by the grand old pagan philosophers, utilized by Newton, the astronomer, and Dalton, the chemist, supposes that the elements of all matter are composed of minute indivisible particles never at rest, endowed with the attraction and repulsion of the magnet. Balfour Stewart says: "In order to realize what is meant by an inorganic molecule, let us take some sand and grind it into smaller and smaller particles, and these again into still smaller. In point of fact, we shall never reach the superlativ degree of smallness by this operation, yet in our imagination we may suppose the subdivision to be carried on continuously, always making the particles smaller and smaller. In this case we should, at last, come to an ultimate molecule of sand, or oxide of silicon, or, in other words, we should arrive at the smallest unity retaining all the properties of sand, so that were it possible to divide the molecule farther, the only result would be to separate it into its chemical constituents consisting of silicon on the one side and oxygen on the other. Thus we arrive at last at the smallest body which can call itself silicon, and the smallest which can call itself oxygen, and we hav no reason to suppose that either of these is capable of subdivision into something else, since we regard oxygen and silicon as elementary or simple bodies. Now these constituents of the silicon molecule are called atoms. . . Now a drop of water no less than a grain of sand is build up of a very great number of molecules attached to one another by the force of cohesion, a force which is much stronger in the sand than in the water, but which nevertheless exists in both. And, moreover, Sir Wm. Thomson, the distinguished physicist, has recently arrived at the following conclusions with regard to the size of the molecule of water: He imagins a drop of water to be magnified until it becomes as large as the earth, having a diameter of eight thousand miles, and all the molecules to be magnified in the same proportion, and he then concludes that a single molecule will appear, under these circumstances, as somewhat larger than a shot, and somewhat smaller than a cricket ball," and this would be the smallest body of water. A farther division would giv us two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen—gases like the air we breathe, colorless and invisible. "It is considered," says Wm. Spottiswood, "as established that light is due to the vibrations of an elastic medium which, in the absence of any better name, is called ether. The ether is understood to pervade all space, and all matter, although its motions are affected in different ways by the molecules of the various media which it permeates."

And Professor Tyndall shows, by his beautiful experiments, that, while traveling together, the light wave and heat wave are not one and the same. He separated them, and found that the most powerful concentration of light was unable to melt the most delicate hoar-frost, while by the heat, brought to a "dark focus, sheets of platinum are raised to vivid redness, zinc is burnt up, paper instantly blazes, magnesium wire is ignited, charcoal, within a receiver containing oxygen, is set burning; a diamond, similarly placed, is caused to glow like a star."

Science has not, as yet, I believe, successfully answered the question, What is electricity? Professor Tyndall givs the theory of Symmer the preference. "According to it, electrical actions are produced by two fluids, each self-repulsiv, but both mutually attractiv. These fluids cling to the atoms of matter, and carry the matter to which they cling along with them. Every body in its natural condition possesses both fluids in equal quantities. As long as the fluids are mixed together they neutralize each other, the body in which they are thus mixed being in its natural or unelectrical condition." He adds, "Theoretic conceptions are incessantly checked and corrected by the advance of knowledge, and this theory of electric fluids is doubted by many eminent scientific men. It will, at all events, hav to be translated into a form which shall connect it with heat and light before it can be accepted as complete." And later Herbert Spencer writes, "And now that heat and light are proved to be modes of motion, it has become obvious that all the allied manifestations of force must be modes of motion. What is the particular mode of motion which constitutes electricity? thus becomes the question. That it is some kind of molecular vibration, different from the molecular vibrations which luminous bodies giv off, is, I presume, taken for granted by all who bring to the consideration of the matter a knowledge of recent discoveries. Beyond those simple oscillations of molecules from which light and heat result, in some cases, arise compound oscillations. Let us consider whether the conditions under which electricity arises are not such as to generate compound oscillations, and whether the phenomena of electricity are not such as must result from compound oscillations."

Faraday sought to establish a common origin for all the forces of nature. He was quite successful in showing a bond of union between electricity, gravitation, chemical action, magnetism, etc. Electricity pervades all. It builds up and tears asunder. It annihilates distance and disregards all obstacles. R. A. Proctor writes: "On the 1st of September, 1859, Messrs. Carrington and Hodgson were observing the sun, one at Oxford and the other in London. Their scrutiny was directed to certain large spots which at that time marked the sun's face. Suddenly a bright light was seen by each observer to break out on the sun's surface, and to travel slowly, in appearance, but in reality at the rate of about 7,000 miles in a minute, across a part of the sun's disk. Now, it was found afterwards that the self-registering magnetic instruments at Kew had made at that very instant a strongly marked jerk. It was learned that at that moment a magnetic storm prevailed at the West Indies, in South America, and in Australia. The signal men in the telegraph stations at Washington and Philadelphia received strong electric shocks; the pen of Bain's telegraph was followed by a flame of fire, and in Norway the telegraph machinery was set on fire. At night great auroras were seen in both hemispheres. It is impossible not to connect these startling magnetic indications with the remarkable appearance observed upon the sun's disk." And in further proof he tells us that observation of the solar spots and oscillations of the magnetic needle tallies exactly in their variations; while W. T. Barrett, in his experiments, shows that electricity "not only passes through space and influences distant bodies, but farther, this wonderful magnetic influence is not interfered with by the presence of opaque or dense substances. On one side of my assistant's head I place our needle and now on the other side I hold the magnet, though the magnet is entirely screened from view. Yet observe, the needle is drawn aside; here the magnetic action has passed through the skull and the delicate tissues of the brain, and, as Mr. Williams could tell you, without the least sensation being experienced." He also shut his magnet up in a box and sealed it hermetically in a glass tube, and still the magnetic power was not in the least affected by being thus confined.

Life, according to Professor Huxley, is "built up of ordinary matter and again resolved into ordinary matter when its work is done." "The physical basis or matter of life" is protoplasm, which "pervades the whole living world" with "a threefold unity—namely, a unity of power or faculty, a unity of form, and a unity of substantial composition," and it matters not in what development it may appear. "The microscopic fungus—a mere infinitesimal ovoid particle, which finds space and duration enough to multiply into countless millions in the body of a living fly; the wealth of foliage, the luxuriance of flower and fruit which lies between this bald sketch of a plant and a giant pine of California;" or, "turning to the other half of the world of life," all animals, from "the great Finner whale, hugest of beasts that liv," to those "invisible animalcules—mere gelatinous specks, multitudes of which could, in fact, dance upon the point of a needle with the same ease as the angels of the schoolmen could in imagination." He takes the fine hair of the nettleweed, and shows that it "consists of a very delicate outer case of wood, closely applied to the inner surface of which is a layer of semi-fluid matter, full of innumerable granules of extreme minuteness. The semi-fluid lining is protoplasm, which thus constitutes a kind of bag full of limpid liquid, and roughly corresponding in form with the interior of the hair which it fills. When viewed with a sufficiently high magnifying power the protoplasmic layer of the nettle-hair is seen to be in a condition of unceasing activity. . . . If a drop of blood be drawn by pricking one's finger, and viewed with proper precautions, and under a sufficiently high microscopic power, there will be seen among the innumerable multitude of little circular, dissoidal bodies, or corpuscles, which float in it and giv it its color, a comparativly small number of colorless corpuscles of somewhat larger size and very irregular shape. If the drop of blood be kept at the temperature of the body these colorless corpuscles will be seen to exhibit a marvelous activity, changing their forms with great rapidity, drawing in and thrusting out prolongations of their substance, and creeping about as if they were independent organisms. The substance which is thus activ is a mass of protoplasm, and its activity differs in detail rather than in principle from that of the nettle."

"Protoplasm is the great organic builder. It is found in the blood, making blood; in the bone, making bone. Nerve, brain, fat, and the tissues each and all are built up by his little architect. Beast and fowl, reptil and fish, mollusk, worm, and polyp are all composed of structural units of the same character, namely, masses of protoplasm with a nucleus. There are sundry very low animals each of which, structurally, is a mere colorless blood corpuscle, leading an independent life. But at the very bottom of the animal scale even this simplicity becomes simplified and all the phenomena of life are manifested by a particle of protoplasm without a nucleus.

"The existence of the matter of life depends on the pre-existence of certain compounds, namely, carbonic acid, water, and ammonia. Withdraw any one of these from the world and all vital phenomena come to an end. They are related to the protoplasm of the plant as the protoplasm of the plant is to that of the animal. Carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen are all lifeless bodies. Of these carbon and oxygen unite in certain proportions and under certain conditions to giv rise to carbonic acid. Hydrogen and oxygen produce water; nitrogen and hydrogen giv rise to ammonia. These new compounds, like the elementary bodies of which they are composed, are lifeless; but when they are brought together under certain conditions, they giv rise to the still more complex body, protoplasm.

"When hydrogen and oxygen are mixed in a certain proportion, and an electric spark is passed through them, they disappear, and a quantitv of water equal in weight to the sum of their weights appears in their place. There is not the slightest parity between the passiv and activ powers of the water and those of the oxygen and hydrogen which hav given rise to it. . . . When carbonic acid, water, and ammonia disappear, and in their place, under the influence of pre-existing living protoplasm, an equivalent weight of the matter of life makes its appearance. . . . There is no sort of parity between the properties of the components and the properties of the resultant, but neither was there in the case of the water. It is also true that what I hav spoken of as the influence of pre-existing living matter is something quite unintelligible. But does anybody quite comprehend the modus operandi of an electric spark, which traverses a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen? . . . . If the phenomena exhibited by water are its properties, so are those presented by protoplasm, living or dead, its properties. If the properties of water may be properly said to result from the nature and disposition of its component molecules, I can find no intelligible ground for refusing to say that the properties of protoplasm result from the nature and disposition of its molecules." Thus we find modern science classifying, simplifying, and utilizing all the forces and properties of nature; matter, force, and necessity, or law is all they find, alike unknown and mysterious because unknown. While Professor Huxley "repudiates the Materialistic philosophy," he says, "I take it to be demonstrable that it is utterly impossible to prove that anything whatever may not be the effect of a material and necessary cause. . . . And while it is thus a philosophical impossibility to demonstrate that any given phenomenon is not the effect of a material cause, anyone who is acquainted with the history of science will admit that its progress has in all ages meant, and now more than ever means, the extension of the province of what we call matter and causation, and the concomitant gradual banishment from all regions of human thought of what we call spirit and spontaneity." Professor Huxley calls this "the Materialistic terminology." Well, it is good enough. Not knowing exactly what the "philosophy" is, "I am content." Professor Tyndall regards "nature as an organic whole; as a body each of whose members sympathizes with the rest, changing, it is true, from ages to ages, but without one real break of continuity or a single interruption of the fixed relations of cause and effect." And the changes are from the simple to complex, from homogeneous to the heterogeneous, beginning with "fire mist," "cosmic vapor," and ending with a solar system. But evolution is not confined to making worlds; it is a universal operation. According to Spencer, "Whether it be in the development of the earth or in the development of life upon its surface; in the development of society, of government, of manufacture, of commerce, of language, of literature, science, art, this same advance from the simple to the complex through successiv differentiations holds uniformly. From the earliest traceable cosmic changes down to the latest results of civilization, we shall find that the transformation of homogeneous into the heterogeneous is that in which evolution essentially consists."

Tyndall: "No one, indeed, doubts now that all the higher types of life with which the earth teems hav been developed by the patient process of evolution from lower organism, and in logical constancy we are bound to trace back the series to the simplest forms of protoplasm which the microscope reveals to us as living units. But all this is but the outcome of life from life, and leaves us without an approach to a solution of the mighty question of the origin of life. There was a time when the earth was a red-hot melted globe, on which no life could exist. In course of time its surface cooled; but, to quote the words of one of our greatest savants, 'when it first became fit for life there was no living thing upon it.' How, then, are we to conceive the origination of organized creatures?" Huxley answers: "If it were given me to look beyond the abyss of geologically recorded time to the still more remote period when the earth was passing through physical and chemical conditions which it can no more see again than a man can recall his infancy, I should expect to be a witness of the evolution of living protoplasm from not-living matter." In looking over the biological world, we may see, as in the heavens, "survivals of the processes of evolutions." Must we believe these lowest forms, "the beginnings of life," hav remained unchanged from some "remote period" before "geologically recorded time?" Is it not opposed to the theory of evolution? "Spontaneous generation" is both affirmed and denied by eminent scientific men. If we take a little vegetable infusion and expose it to the air, it soon becomes filled with minute animalculæ. Whence comes this life? Experiments tend to show that it is derived from minute spores or eggs, which are always floating in the air. The French chemist, M. Pasteur, succeeded in catching a quantity of the "germ dust," which he introduced into some infusion that had stood eighteen months without developing life, and in twenty-four hours life made its appearance. Then he dissolved some of his gun-cotton in which he had trapped them, and, taking the dust which settled, transferred it to his microscope, and found, besides an "enormous number of starch grains," an "immense number of other organic substances, such as the spores of fungi which had been floating about in the air, and had got caged in this way." The Rev. Mr. Dallenger, while saying, "I want you to understand that all the foremost biologists in Europe and America to-day are profound believers in the doctrin of evolution," adds: "The conviction to-day of the largest number by far of the most competent biologists is, that down to the uttermost verge of organized existence, out to its very edge, and in its lowest condition, it is yet true that only that which is living can produce that which shall liv." It is just possible that the reverend gentleman may be wrong, notwithstanding the truth of his and Pasteur's experiments. Evolution, I believe, has never yet been seen, nor hav its truths been established by experiments; and were it possible for Professor Huxley to look beyond the "abyss of geologically recorded time," he might still be unable to see it. Dr. Fraisure, in his "New Materialism," assumes the life principle to be inherent in the atoms, and that chemical combination is the result of sexual intercourse of the elements. Instead of classifying the elements as metallic and non-metallic, he would class them as male and female. "If all atoms are alive, indestructible, and, so to speak, male and female, and nothing exists save those atoms, then all life may be said to originate from the sexual intercourse of the atoms." Professor Huxley, in his "Origin of Species," speaking of the process of a sexual multiplication, says, "I say there is good reason to believe that it would come to an end if a new commencement were not obtained by a conjunction of the two sexual elements."

Professor Tyndall: "Trace the line of life backward, and see it approaching more and more to what we call the purely physical condition. . . . We break a magnet, and find two poles in each of the fragments. We continue the process of breaking, but however small the parts, each carries with it, though enfeebled, the polarity of the whole; and when we can break no longer, we prolong the intellectual vision to the polar molecules. Are we not urged to do something similar in the case of life? . . . Believing, as I do, in the continuity of nature, I cannot stop abruptly where our microscopes cease to be of use. Here the vision of the mind authoritativly supplements the vision of the eye. By an intellectual necessity I cross the boundary of the experimental evidence, and discern in matter . . . the promis and potency of all terrestial life." Mr. Darwin approvingly quotes from some "divine" who thinks "it is just as noble a conception of the deity to believe he created a few original forms capable of self-development into other and needful forms, as to believe that he required a fresh act of creation to supply the voids caused by the actions of his laws." But, really, would it be a less "noble conception" to go a little farther back and say that when he created the elements he endowed them with power "capable of self-development into other and needful forms?" But inasmuch as the elements and forces of nature are alike indestructible, may we not believe they never were created (making something out of nothing is unthinkable); that matter, force, and necessity constitute the trinity of nature, "capable of self-development into other and needful forms?" This may not be as "noble a conception of deity," but it is possible our "conceptions of deity" hav been shaped more by our ideas of grandeur and nobility than by common sense and observed facts in nature.

Courtlandt Palmer:

The soul in humility
Turns to the infinit, rev'rent with awe;
But sees the sterility,
Feels the futility,
Godhead to limit in limits of law;
And yet it potential is—
Stars are its chariots, space its domain—
Thought its essential is,
Truth its credential is,
Science its symphony, man its refrain.

Rev. Geo. W. Cooke: "No man has a passing fancy that did not come out of some adequate and natural cause. The beliefs of men of every sort hav been the results of causes in man and nature to be found. . . There is no guess, no speculation, no theory, but plain and simple demonstration from the facts of primitiv belief. . . Thanks to thinkers and patient investigators, who hav carefully collected all the facts possible about existing savage peoples and their customs, beliefs, and ideas; and, comparing them with all that can be gathered of ancient races, either from archæology or history, the result has been as complete as it has been surprising. . . All ethnological inquiries point to the conclusion that man is, as we first know him, a child in purpose, in thought, in knowledge. 'Want of power to discriminate between useful and useless facts,' 'inability to concentrate the attention on anything complex or abstract,' 'little rational surprise or curiosity,' and but 'few words of even a low grade of abstractness,' are characteristics of primitiv man, according to Spencer. . . His extreme credulity shows us the result of undeveloped ideas of causation and law. . . Any story, however monstrous, is believed, and any explanation, however absurd, is accepted as satisfactory. . . 'To look at things with the eyes of absolute ignorance' is what we must do if we would comprehend the condition of the primitiv man and the growth of his ideas and beliefs."

He sees his shadow following him persistently. He has no idea of the cause, and so believes it to be a second self. He sleeps and in his dreams is away upon the hunt or meets his friends. When he awakes, knowing that his body has not left the place, what more natural than that he should ascribe it to his shadow, and thus in dreams the shadows of his dead companions return "to hav an hour's chat with all." Hence the idea of the soul, which can leave the body during sleep, and survives the body's death. "Dreams," says Lubbock, "are intimately associated with the lower forms of religion. To the savage they hav a reality and an importance which we can scarcely appreciate. Hence the savage considers the events of his dreams to be as real as those of his waking hours. And hence he naturally feels that he has a spirit which can quit the body."

Tylor shows that in many languages one word serves for shadow, soul, spirit; echo is also identified with the spirit or soul of the departed; the breath and the beating of the heart by some are called the soul or spirit. "The Seminoles thought the breath or spirit of a dying person might be caught in the mouth of another and the receiver made stronger by this additional life. At the death-bed of an ancient Roman, his nearest kinsman inhaled his dying breath to receive his spirit. . . . These ideas are not simply those of savage tribes, but they continue to influence the religion and philosophy of men through every stage of advancing thought and life. . . . The primitiv man, as we know from numberless examples, thinks of the world about him as peopled with ghosts. His belief in ghostly ancestors generally changes to belief in spirits, that is, he ceases to think of the invisible as dead men, and only thinks of them as the unseen agents by which the phenomena of nature and life take place. They are feared as the cause of storms, they are sought to aid in the labors of the chase." Disease is attributed to spirits. Evil spirits enter the body and cause no end of trouble; whence came the priest to "cast out devils." The idea of a great spirit is formed from natural phenomena. He sees the lightning leap from the cloud and rend the oak. The tornado levels the forest, the floods drown out his cavern home, and his original god is a demon to be propritiated with sacrifice. It is not true that all races worship a supreme being; many tribes hav no idea of God, and worship is not to be found among the lowest tribes, and the half civilized who hav evolved one or more gods make them a little more powerful, but frequently less cunning, than themselvs. Thus we find the idea of soul, spirit, and God is but the endeavor of primitiv man to account for natural phenomena. Cooke says: "The common theological ideas about spirit probably could never hav had an existence but for this obscure origin, and would not to-day be tenable conceptions but for the survival of culture which makes them still firm in the grasp they hav on our thought. The very distinction made by theologians of soul and spirit, the one as vitality or the life principle, and the other as the intangible existence which merely has its abode in the body and does not die with it, is one made by primitiv races, by causes the most natural in the world. A scientific psychology banishes such a distinction," and when we come to regard the fact that those deas hav come down to us "through a long line of ancestors" coupled with the ideas of faith; that all reason upon the subject was rank treason, and that doubt was death to the soul, we see that we inherit our religion.

George Eliot:

What! Shall the trick of nostrils and of lips
Descend through generations, and the soul
That moves within our frames like God in worlds
Imprint no record, leave no documents,
Of her great history?
Shall men bequeath
The fancies of their palates to their sons,
And shall the shudders of restraining awe,
The slow-wept tears of contrite memory,
Faith's prayerful labor, and the food divine
Of fast ecstatic—shall these pass away
Like wind upon the waters tracklessly?

But science will dispel the dark shadows and free the mind of all such superstition.

W. K. Clifford: "The dim and shadowy outlines of the superhuman deity fade slowly away from before us, and as the mists of his presence float aside we perceive with greater clearness the shape of yet a grander and nobler figure—of him who made all gods and shall unmake them."

Courtlandt Palmer:

So now the role of man
In his own manhood on earth shall be played.
So now the soul of man
Finds the true goal of man,
Heavenly realms by this world overweighed.

Science per Huxley: "The improver of natural knowledge absolutely refuses to acknowledge authority as such. For him skepticism is the highest of duties; blind faith the one unpardonable sin. The man of science has learned to believe in justification not by faith, but by verification."

Theology per Zion's Herald:

Think not at all. Think not, but kneel and ask.
O friend, by thought was never creature freed
From any sin, from any mortal need.
Be patient; not by thought canst thou devise
What course of life for thee is right and wise.
It will be written up and thou wilt read.

Courtlandt Palmer:

The soul of humanity
Is the good gained; the bad quelled through all time.
From dead Christianity
New-risen sanity
Saves no baptized in the race-soul sublime.
Thus in a unity
Midst nature's processes man will be found.
From such community
Fresh opportunity
Flows for the race in one brotherhood bound.

Buffalo, N. Y. A. L. BALLOU.

The Liberal Club.

Reported for The Truth Seeker by Mr. Putnam.

There was a large audience at the Liberal Club on Friday evening, Nov. 27th, for it was expected that between Wakeman and Eccles the universe could be so thoroughly pulverized that the heart of its mystery would be exposed to full view, and instead of seeing through a glass darkly, like the Christian saint in glory, we should look face to face. Mr. Eccles having caught the Unknowable and analyzed and dissected its huge rotundity and described it as fully as if it was in the museum of curiosities; and Wakeman having a pretty thorough understanding of the knowable, of course, amid such a conjunction of forces the sparks of information would fly fast and furious, and the secret of the ages would be revealed. In order to add dignity to the interesting occasion Dr. Foote, Jr., presided with impartial and Jove-like loftiness over the giant combatants and prevented fatal consequences, so that at last the audience escaped from the fiery furnace as unharmed as the ancient children of Israel under similar circumstances when the heat was seven times hotter than usual. The Liberal Club never witnessed a question discussed with such fervent enthusiasm. It seemed to be at the boiling point all the time.

After the secretary's report and announcements by the chairman of the evening, Dr. Foote, Jr., Mr. Wakeman gave his most interesting address, mainly upon Comte and his philosophy. He spoke of the suppressed book and showed that Frederic Harrison had just cause for objecting to the publication of the book in the form in which it was put forth, since it did not sufficiently regard the rights of both parties. As a result the book was suppressed, but the ideas of the book are well known to most readers of current philosophy.

The bone of it all really was the philosophy and religion of Comte. Mr. Wakeman regarded Comte as one of the few great philosophers of the world. He was the man who cleaned up things, while Spencer aimed to be a man who darkened counsel by many words. So far as he, Spencer, had any value in his disquisitions, he unconsciously copied after Comte and reproduced his words and ideas.

Comte was the expositor of the knowable as the foundation of religion. He was the first philosopher to declare the correlations of the evolution of life. He discusses the two phases of existence, the objectiv and the subjectiv. In the objectiv he givs the science of the progressiv material universe; in the subjectiv he proclaims the ideas and motivs of humanity, culminating in the ego from whence arises the spiritual world, and is the source of religion in its threefold aspect, or synthesis, of the intellect, the emotions, and action.

In science we start, as the farthest off, with the simple affirmation of the unknown; then out of that, which to our thought is an infinit fulness, comes the cosmos as the mind of man beholds it in the science of astronomy; thence we come to the earth as of all the stars the nearest and the most important in its relations to ourselvs; thence we proceed to vital or organic forces upon this planet, and upward to the highest form of all humanity itself, and to our own selfhood. This is the objectiv process of thought. Subjectivly we begin with the ego, and proceed to moral motiv and action as the outcome—not of the material universe, but of the ideas which man himself has of this universe.

There are five processes of the growth of the religious sentiments in the mind of man. Religion begins with the mysterious, or the unknown, and its emotions are simply awe and wonder, together with fear and terror in the earlier ages. Then comes astrology, or star-worship, where the knowable begins and impresses with majestic order, and hence the feeling of admiration. Afterward comes Polytheism, by which nature becomes animated with innumerable deities, but deities that can be understood in their motiv and action. Then, fourthly, comes Montheism in Christianity and Islam, but with a God that can still be comprehended. As this God vanishes into the unknowable, the unknowable does not remain as the basis of the highest religious sentiments, but permanently prevails as the great power nearest to ourselvs and best known, out of which and for which the spirit of religion is made manifest in sublime motiv and conduct. This is the last and the noblest stage of human development.

In this historic view of man no religion dies, but is transformed—it takes on ampler life, as it allies itself more and more with increasing knowledge and self-respect.

The human soul should order human events for human welfare. This is the highest voice of religion to-day. Comte was right, except in one thing. He did not understand democracy, and under the regime of science he would retain the hierarchy of the Middle Ages. But the Religion of Humanity is for an ideal republic. We must not repeat the past, but go on to new conditions with new institutions of human co-operation. Spencer makes the human will mechanical, Comte makes it dynamical—a living force. This is the profound distinction between these two thinkers. One says, "Let things alone; all will be right by the process of evolution." The other says, "Make an effort; labor for the ideal; out of the material of the past build a better future for the human race."

After Mr. Wakeman sat down Dr. Eccles mounted the platform, and smilingly informed the audience that he was a very live corpse. Indeed he was. Having digested the Unknowable, how could he be demolished? He declared that Mr. Wakeman had utterly misunderstood and misrepresented Spencer. He had mistaken the shadow for the substance. Religion was not in humanity, for it proceeds from that which was above humanity. As there was no sweetness until one had tasted of sugar, so there was no religion until one had tasted of the Unknowable—eaten it, so to speak, as the Christians eat their God. Then there is a religious sensibility, but not before. The Unknowable is not in the far-off stars, but in the very essence of our being, in the action of our faculties themselvs. In every phenomenon, objectiv and subjectiv, there is a something—a substance—which can never be known. The religious progress of humanity depends upon the amount of information it has concerning this Unknowable; that is, the more we know of the Unknowable the less we know of the knowable, the less important it becomes, until, finally, as Proctor says, what we know is nothing, and what we don't know is everything. Therefore, to be is not to be. This is the sapient conclusion of the Spencerian formula, as stated by Eccles. Moreover, the will of man is simply the outcome of circumstances. He cannot help himself, and therefore is entitled to no credit for anything that he does. He is not worthy of our gratitude—not even a mother's devotion; it is all mechanical, like the glow of lightning. The Unknowable is the source of all. The Supreme Being, it arranges all, and is alone worthy of worship.

Mr. Wakeman, in his reply, cried shame upon this mechanical philosophy. Man is an intelligent power, higher in quality than anything we know of the Unknowable, and therefore the oneness of all men—Humanity—is the Supreme Being, and the most worthy of reverence. The cry of "let alone" is not the conclusion of a true religion—every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost. Humanity is not a straggling line, but a circle, and in that circle all are included—the least with the greatest, the weak with the strong. Such is the ideal for which we strive—a happy human race, in this new world. From the infinit unknown and the starry cosmos, from plants and animals, from human beings, and thence humanity, and thence society, and at last a united mankind—from these and to these higher and higher still we pass, laboring for still nobler developments.

Westward the star of empire holds its way,
The first four acts already past;
The fifth shall close the drama with the day;
Time's noblest offspring is the last.

This concluded the debate, which was maintained with great ability on both sides. That Mr. Eccles is an industrious student none will deny. He knows Spencer by heart, and defends him with exceeding ability. Mr. Wakeman is perfectly at home in these regions of thought, and his discourse was a fine intellectual entertainment and instruction. The audience was delighted with his wide-reaching discussion of a most fascinating problem.

The Opposition.

WHO WANT THE MUSEUMS OPEN?

From the New York Observer.

A morning paper says that—

Many thousand copies of a petition requesting the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the American Museum of Natural History to open, free of charge to the public, these institutions on Sunday are being circulated in various parts of the city. The petitions were prepared by S. P. Putnam, to whom, when filled with signatures, they will be returned. "I feel very much encouraged over our work," said Mr. Putnam, "for the indications are that half a hundred thousand persons will join in our request."

This Mr. Putnam is the secretary of the National Liberal League, now called the American Secular Union, of which the notorious Infidel, Robert Ingersoll, is the president. The object of this society is to secularize the government of this country, to prevent the Bible from being used either as a book of morals or as a text-book, and to destroy as far as possible the Christian ideas of the nation. Mr. Putnam is also the chairman of the Executiv Committee of the New York State Freethinkers' Association, whose headquarters are at the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which was the organ of D. M. Bennett, the man who was sentenced to the penitentiary for one year for the crime of publishing obscene literature. It is well that the public should know the sort of men who are endeavoring to get the museums open on Sunday in this city. Do decent and respectable citizens care to train in such a company? It may suit the interest of some of our city journals to hav all Sabbath restrictions removed, that their violations of the Sabbath by Sunday publication may seem less offensiv to Christian people; but let it be known that the chief advocates for this Sunday opening are not tired workingmen and women, nor the cultivated and intelligent portion of the community; not at all! They are the comrades of the man who affronts all religious sentiment by his ribald blasphemy, and who has neither character nor reputation of any sort to lose. In a warfare upon the quiet, self-respecting, and benevolent part of the community, who sustain in the largest proportion all education, art, science, and reasonable amusement in this city and this land, they are associated with men who seek to defile our schools with impure publications, who invade our families with attacks upon marriage, and would, if they could, "unchain the tiger" of Infidelity and license throughout America. Those who work with such people against the sanctity of the Sabbath and its heavensent rest will not be long in descending to the lower deep where foulness and corruption are united with Atheism and Communism.

"INGERSOLLISM" ORGANIZED FOR OFFENSIV WAR AGAINST ALL THAT'S "SACRED."

From the Mail and Express.

One of the main and most efficient officers of the American Secular Union, which is the sole agency at work circulating petitions for the Sunday opening of the Metropolitan Museums of Art and Natural History, is Mr. Samuel P. Putnam. Who is Mr. Putnam, and what convictions, sentiments, and interests has he in common with the great mass of the classes of our community whose efforts and energy and contributions to the two Metropolitan Museums hav made them, so largely, what they are?

A copy of the New York organ of the more rampant and aggressiv Infidelity of the country, entitled THE TRUTH SEEKER, will perhaps answer this question. This paper, in its issue of October 17th, gave a full report of the remarkable proceedings of the ninth annual Congress of the National Liberal League at Cleveland. Mr. Charles Watts, the first vice-president of this aggressiv organization, spoke at length upon the object and mission of the American Secular Union, which is apparently opposed to everything that is "sacred."

The American Secular Union was formally inaugurated on this occasion, with the following officers: [Here follows a list of the officers of the Union.]

"Ingersollism" has thus become an organic evil, in the form of this American Secular Union, whose industrious secretary Mr. Samuel P. Putnam is. How industrious he has been may be judged from his own report to the assembled Ingersollites, as follows: "Your secretary has visited over fifty different cities and villages, and lectured from one to three times in each place. He has traveled nearly 8,000 miles, over a territory 1,800 miles long and 1,200 miles wide," etc.

Two of the specific objects of the American Secular Union are the taxation of church buildings and war against the Christian Sunday. If half the churches of the country were sold for taxes, as they would be if the American Secular Union had its way, and if the Christian Sunday were made wholly "Secular," few things now regarded as "sacred" would long remain.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, ELIZUR WRIGHT, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, PARKER PILLSBURY, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C ADAMS, TITUS L BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.

E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,456.72
Thos. Knight (paid),	5 00
W. E. Scott (paid),	1.00
Ralph Helm (paid),	10.00
John F. Helm (paid),	1.00
F. C. Ladd (paid),	1.00
A. C. Forbes (paid),	1.00
Charles Couderman (charter fee, paid),	5.00
Total,	1,480.72

PLEDGES PAID.—F. M. Borden, $4.00.

The Secretary's Western Tour.

Let all friends of Freethought in the West make every possible effort for lectures in this tour. The secretary will present the cause of the American Secular Union, its work and its methods. Especially will the friends in Colorado, Texas, Utah, and the Pacific states enter at once into correspondence in regard to this matter. It is desirable to make an extended tour and to visit all places possible, no matter how small or how few the Liberals. Hold a meeting, get together, and by companionship realize the value of the work for liberty and justice. Let there be a grand rally all along the line, and let the cheering word pass from company to company.

The Opening of the Museums on Sunday.

The work progresses, as will be seen on another page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Important and influential names are signed to the petition, besides vast numbers of the working people.

Felix Adler spoke Sunday morning last on "The Right Use of Sunday." Chickering Hall was crowded to the utmost to listen to this noble discourse, which was a ringing plea for a bright and cheerful Sunday, for a festival day for labor such as it used to be in the olden time before Constantine made it an ecclesiastical institution and baptized it with his blood-red hand of murder.

The Sabbath, Professor Addler said, was fundamentally in the ancient Jewish regime a day for humanity; for physical rest; for the lightening of the burdens of toil. It was the poor man's day; it was the promis of the slave; it was the protection of the homestead, as witness the Sabbatic year, and the grand Sabbath of years every half century, when the bond went free, and the debt upon the house was removed—a beautiful Sabbath; and such a Sabbath should again make lovely the paths of human toil, and proclaim liberty and justice. Professor Adler declared there should be a Sunday League organized for the great purpose to rescue Sunday from the clutches of ecclesiasticism, and devote it to the welfare of all, and make every path open to amusement and profit. Such a league is the American Secular Union, and it thus fulfils a great want, and in this regard has a much needed mission to perform. What a magnificent work there is for each Secular Union to accomplish in every community cursed by a gloomy Sabbath. What an immense benefit is conferred upon the working-people by filling this rest day with human happiness; by providing theaters and music, the treasures of art, and all that can adorn and make beautiful the life of man. This is pre-eminently a constructiv work. It is making a Sunday for the people. It is adding dignity to labor. To remove all restrictions from the Sabbath, to make a Secular holiday, will do more to destroy superstition than almost anything else that the Union can do. We hav begun the fight here in New York, and we intend to keep it up all along the line, and get the world rid of the tyranny and hypocrisy that uses the Sabbath as a mask for all sorts of attacks upon mental freedom.

SUNDAY EVENING LECTURE.

On Sunday evening I lectured before the New York Spiritualistic Association on the "New Heaven and Earth," and on the points presented, the audience and myself seem to be pretty well agreed. Whatever may happen in the hereafter, we are all interested in that humanity to which we now belong, and to which we always shall belong though we may liv forever; therefore to make this earth a happy spot is the grand aim in which all men and spirits, if there are such, are interested. After this lecture, Dr. Teed—erst the opponent of D. M. Bennett—gave an astrological discourse in which the influence of the stars upon human destiny was quite vigorously expounded. It was good enough to be true, but for all that I don't know whether it is true or not. At any rate I like to see the moon on my right shoulder, and I hope that I was born under some happy star. I like the poetry of it, although the science of it is rather uncertain.

Sunday next I lecture before the Newark Society on the American Secular Union and its work. I hav just received the Liberal. Lively as ever, and it reports progress in the Southwest, and renewed interest and enthusiasm.

Received bulletins of the campaign in Utah from Wm. Reynolds, chairman of the state committee, and letter from Robert Wilson, lecturer, show the progress of the work. Extracts will be given next week.

TO THE FREETHINKERS OF NEW YORK STATE.

Push the petitions for church taxation, etc., rapidly. If possible, find out what kind of a man your representativ is, and what attitude he will take on the question when before the legislature.

TO THE LIBERALS OF NEW YORK CITY.

Push the petitions for the opening of the museums on Sunday. Let each get one hundred names. Return all petitions, when signed, as soon as possible to 33 Clinton Place.

In Memoriam.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

There is a glory when the full ripe years
Of noble effort close in death's white crown,
And the rich effluence of one's life appears;
When youth and ages are blended in one stream;
And the bright promis of the morning's hours
Irradiates all the glow of evening's sky.
Thus our brave Nestor passes to his rest,
Sweet as a babe—yet strong as worth can be;
A soldier ever in the van of fight.
Green laurels for thee, tried and veteran one,
Quick ever to the glowing light of truth,
As sways the magnet to its burning star.
Thy heart was steadfast and thy mind was clear
Through all the years of battle and defeat;
Each triumph only made thee still more firm
To meet the conflict's ever deepening throes.
Thou sought'st the perfect, not the partial good,
The unattained was still for thee the goal,
Each conquest made was but the rugged space
For harder trial and more earnest stroke.

What memories crowd the mind of thy long years,
Eventful years whose action pulsed sublime
With the wide world's enormous clash of arms,
When millions gathered 'neath the smoke of war,
And freedom's banners shook from sea to sea
With the fierce thunders of a nation's march!
These years before us pass—earth's greatest years,
When liberty attained its noblest power;
When from uncounted limbs the chains were struck
And the black brow was wreathed with freedom's fire.
Yet deeper chains there are, and deeper wounds
To the fair life of Justice—so the strife
To finer issue, clearer aim proceeds;
And in each fresh advance thy ardent mind
Was ever ready with exultant zeal.
Age could not dim the keenness of thy thought,
Or crystallize the fervor of thy heart
To dull complacence with the victories won.
As if one's duty were forever o'er
When he had made one sacrifice for truth,
Or reaped one golden harvest for the race;
As if each hour did not new duties make,
And every year new seeds to harvest bring.
To grandly die, one still must grandly liv,
And to the latest breath a soldier be
For freedom—and rest only 'neath the flowers.

Such is thy rest. Thy toils at length are o'er,
In Death's serene and beautiful domain;
Thy laurels now all won, and ever bright
In the majestic silence of the grave;
Placid thy sleep, as if on mother's breast
Thy cheek was laid 'mid love's caresses dear—
As if again upon thy snows of age
The roses of thy youth were shining soft,
To make a garland for thy death so fair.

Immortal still thy life to us—to all—
Thy word still breathing to make bright our hope,
And urge us to the noblest one can do.
There shall be no retreat. The glorious flag
Beneath whose storm-tossed folds thy life was spent
Shall still be borne by us to ampler hights.
We will not rest, however great the gain,
For thy bright spirit shall still lead us on,
Scorning the past when the vast future calls
To constant service in the ceaseless toil.

From thy most peaceful grave and quiet sleep—
From the sweet silence of thy closed lips—
From thy pale form the glow of virtue thrills,
And sweeping onward from thy lofty soul,
Becomes a part of human progress still.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Hark, From the Tomb a Doleful Sound!

CROSBY, AND HIS ELDERS, TO THE PEOPLE.

The Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby has written the following pastoral letter to the members of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church. The letter was written in accordance with the action of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church on May 29th, condemning the publication, sale, and reading of Sunday newspapers:

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD: The session of the Fourth Avenue church, of which you are members, feel that a word to you of affectionate counsel will be both in accordance with their duty as spiritual officers of the church and with your own Christian views and sentiments.

We hav seen with great sorrow the entrance of the Sunday newspaper into Christian families, and, having witnessed the unhappy results of this admission, are desirous of warning you against the growing evil. The Sunday newspaper not only employs a large number of persons for its sale upon the Lord's holy day, but it furnishes secular reading to divert the mind from the holy themes especially appropriate to the Sabbath. Our young people, who would not otherwise think of spending the day in such reading, are readily led to consider it a safe and proper thing when they see the paper brought into the family, and even purchased from the stand by members of the church.

There is no influence more insidiously seductiv than this for the demoralization of our Christian households. Its air of respectability, the brief notice of some religious event in a corner of the sheet, the fact carefully proclaimed that the paper is not made up on Sunday, all furnish easy excuses to the conscience for harboring and encouraging that which unfits the mind for serious thought, which draws it away from God's word, and which thus nullifies all the sacred influences of the Lord's day. The mind thus led becomes filled with thoughts on business, politics, games, theaters, and crimes (which form the staple of newspaper literature), at the time when the Lord calls us especially to consider the things that belong to our higher, spiritual welfare.

No Christian can yield to such an influence without deadening his piety, chilling his faith, and destroying his usefulness. His example, also, becomes most pernicious, sowing broadcast the seeds of worldliness and Infidelity. The ungodly world rejoices in beholding the religion of Christ brought down to its own level, and Satan will use every effort through the power of fashion to accomplish this end.

The Sunday newspaper is a powerful engin to achieve this result. To refuse it, to oppose it, demands a firm, resolute, positiv spirit, and this is too seldom found among professing Christians. It is so much easier to drift with the tide. But our Lord calls us to a bold stand, squarely to face such assaults upon the godly life, and we are derelict toward him if we weakly or timidly yield to Satan.

Dear brethren of this church, we believe better things of you. We hav seen your zeal in Christ's cause and your earnest devotion to every good work in his name. We know the purity of your faith, and the ardor of your Christian love. We are assured, therefore, that you will receive this fraternal word of exhortation with the spirit in which it is addressed to you; and if any one of you hav thoughtlessly encouraged the great evil to which we hav alluded, that you will strive to correct the error, and stamp the Sunday newspaper with your earnest practical condemnation. We all desire the spread of God's truth through the community. We desire to see souls saved and Christians edified through the means of grace. We recognize God's holy day as prominent among those means, and would not hav that day robbed of its power and meaning by the use of the Sunday newspaper. Let us, then, with these desires, pray and labor faithfully to overcome this device of Satan against the gospel of salvation. Yours in Christ,

HOWARD CROSBY, Pastor.

Ralph Wells, C. W. Brinckerhoff, William F. Lee, Walter Edwards, George Pancoast, Geo. E. Sterry, Jas. M. Farr, A. J. Langdon, Charles N. Taintor, Warner Van Norden, Reuben Langdon, and Jno. Stewart, elders.

TO CROSBY AND HIS ELDERS.

From the New York Sun of November 17th.

The Rev. Howard Crosby, D D., and the elders of his Presbyterian church in Fourth avenue hav addressed a letter to the flock, exhorting them to giv up the reading of Sunday newspapers, on the ground that it "unfits the mind for serious thought," "draws it away from God's word," and "nullifies all the sacred influences of the Lord's day."

If Dr. Crosby and his elders sincerely believe that God's law requires that the whole of Sunday should be spent in worship and religious meditation only, and are accustomed to so employ its hours themselvs, they were entirely justified in sending out their words of condemnation and of warning. If his conception of duty demands of a Presbyterian that on the the first day of the week he should throughout resolutely turn his thoughts away from the affairs and pleasures of this world and fasten them unchangeably on the things of eternity, he ought by no means to read a Sunday newspaper, whether it is secular or nominally religious, for in both he will find much to draw his attention to earthly concerns. He must pass the day in prayer, in listening to spiritual discourses, and in reading books occupied only with sacred subjects

But if neither Dr. Crosby nor any one of his elders so observes Sunday, what shall we say? Does not their letter savor of hypocrisy and giv encouragement to hypocrisy, a vice which does more harm to religion than all its other enemies put together?

For people know that, as a matter of fact, Presbyterians, both clergymen and laymen, do not liv up to the precepts of that letter. During the hours of service a line of carriages stands in front of Dr. Crosby's Fourth avenue church, and the coachmen amuse each other as best they can while the doctor is preaching his sermon. They are the carriages and servants of elders and other members of the church who are inside listening to the pulpit eloquence, and work is required of them on Sunday, when in reality there is no occasion for it. Yet this letter attacks the Sunday newspaper because it necessitates Sunday labor—because it "employs a large number of persons for its sale upon God's holy day!"

When the sermon is over and the last hymn sung, the congregation begin to pour out from Dr. Crosby's church, and the passer-by observes that they talk together as they step forth, and their conversation is evidently about other than spiritual matters, for they laugh and seem in first-rate animal spirits, as if they were glad to get once more into the free air. They are pretty sure to be hungry, too, and they hurry home to eat a hearty dinner, provided it was the morning service, and, the meal over, the great part of them probably proceed to enjoy the nap with which they regularly relieve the tedium of Sunday. The conversation of the household may be in part about Dr. Crosby's eloquent discourse, but in general it is about the same as on other days, and if the head of the family has a business venture on his mind he is pretty sure to think all the more about it because of his idleness. How will the market go this week? Can this speculation last, and are not the public skating on very thin ice? Even if he takes up the Bible to read, he a man not accustomed to study, his thoughts fly away to "business, politics, games, theaters, and crimes," or his head drops in slumber.

The truth is that not one Presbyterian in a thousand actually observes Sunday in the spirit of this letter. Dr. Crosby himself does not do it; none of the elders who signed the letter does it. And the people know that the practice of these men belies their professions—that they do not devote Sunday exclusivly "to the things that belong to our higher spiritual welfare."

They know, too, that of all the reading to which men and women are commonly inclined, the most wholesome is furnished by a good Sunday newspaper, which helps to make profitable a day that without it would be passed in so large a part in intellectual torpidity, in idle talk, or in injurious dissipation. Outside of their hours in his church Dr. Crosby's congregation probably are most usefully and innocently employed on Sunday when they are reading such a newspaper.

Is it any wonder that the Rev. Howard Crosby, D D, has so little influence among the people as a moral and social reformer? Yet he works very hard and very earnestly to force Puritanical notions on the public.

Communications.

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

A LECTURE BY T. B. WAKEMAN (CONTINUED).

X.—THE GRAND FEDERAL REPUBLIC WILL REST UPON THE PEOPLES ORGANIZED INTO SEPARATE, FEDERAL, INDUSTRIAL, REPRESENTATIVE, SOCIAL, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLICS, WHICH WILL BE THE EMBODIMENT AND EXERCISE THE FUNCTIONS OF THE TEMPORAL POWER, SO AS TO SECURE THE WELFARE OF THE WHOLE PEOPLE.

While the general international interests of mankind will be watched over, protected, and administered by the Great Federal Republic or Parliament of Man, formed by the federation of the advanced peoples of the earth, it is evident that the peoples themselves will always have local, special, and domestic interests which must be administered by governments of their own. That these governments will be republics is evident from the facts that by natural selection the cheapest, easiest, most stable, and yet most flexible and most effective government is the popular republic. This is seen throughout history where nearly every people has had its origin and type of government in the commune, tribe, gens, or mir, whence the Democratic Republic has naturally evolved whenever opportunity has been afforded for the free play of the social factors. This evolution is well illustrated in the history of the Germanic and Anglo-Saxon and Swiss peoples, as Professor Fiske has shown. The great obstacles to this republican evolution have been war, theology, and the consequent interest and ambition of usurping rulers and priests, illustrated so fearfully in those two grand monstrosities of sociology, the Roman Empire and the Roman Papacy, which stand as an everlasting admonition of the dangers of despotism and superstition, though in their time they were stages of progress.

The best types of the future Federal republics which the civilized peoples of the earth will imitate are the Federation of the Swiss Cantons and the Federal Republic of the United States of America, under one simple written Constitution for general purposes, with separate cantons or states for local and domestic purposes. Experience has proved that there is more practical wisdom and statesmanship in our Constitution than in all the speculations of all of the philosophers from Aristotle down. It seems to have been the result of a special exigency by which the citizen's allegiance was divided for general purposes to the General Federal government, and for all other purposes was left to his own State, County, and Town. Thus the strength of protection of the mightiest empires are obtained, and yet made to secure the most perfect liberty of the smallest groups in which the people chose to unite for local purposes or to express their will. This composite Federal system of government is capable of unlimited development and application. It only will enable mankind to manage the affairs of separate localities, and at the same time of the whole planet, with peace, safety, and liberty. The first great lesson of all reformers is to understand this principle of federation with its divided allegiance, sovereignty, and functions, for if evolution and history teach anything, it is that the higher integration or the Religion of Humanity will be finally realized, not in any Papal Regime, but as the United States of the World.

In order to reach this result, each nation and state should be republicanized as rapidly as practicable. The hereditary kings, emperors, and aristocrats should be replaced by a Council, Assembly, Congress, or Parliament, who should appoint the Executive and administer public affairs as simply as possible for the general welfare. As the era of wars, revolutions, and conquests will have passed away under the Republic of Man, every people will become industrial instead of military. The state will therefore cease to be a military organization, as it still remains to a large extent. It will have four main functions: (1) To protect life and property; (2) to provide and regulate the money and the general means of production and distribution; (3) to provide proper means of production, and necessary support to every citizen, man, woman, or child; (4) to establish and sustain the "spiritual power" in their work of general education as the basis of suffrage to both men and women.

In this outline lecture, it is not possible to dilate upon the details of these four classes of functions of the regenerated industrial state. To realize them must be the work of years to come. If those named strike you as novel, impractical, and utopian, the reply is that they are not expected to be realized tomorrow, nor ever, except by the course of evolution in working out the common welfare. But are they not inevitable deductions from what a Republic must do when war gives way to peaceful co-operation in agriculture, manufactures, and commerce? The state will become the common center and instrument of this co-operation with its provision and distribution. It will not only protect life and property better than now, but will remove the sources of injustice and inequality among citizens by taking to itself the functions of government now irregularly and expensively performed by monopolies and corporations. To that end we may predict that the state, by the aid of the general government, will provide and regulate the currency and the means of trade and travel as is already projected.

But it will do more. As in olden times the soldier was led to meet the enemy and was supported in the campaign and after, together with those women and children dependent upon him, so Humanity will require that the captains of industry shall do at least as much in the great industrial campaign against the bounty of Nature. The state, by a proper department, will regulate labor so as to secure its general success in securing abundant means of subsistence for all. Nor, by the aid of science and improved machinery, will there be any insurmountable difficulty in accomplishing this. The means of food-production on land and in the sea are now almost unlimited, and the law of Malthus will not reach us, as to subsistence, under any proper management of our industries, for ages to come, and then it can be obeyed by a voluntary control of population and its limitation to the best parentage.

Nor let any one fear that the subsistence thus produced, or even the money into which it may be converted, cannot be distributed to the producers and to those of the Commonwealth who need it, so as to prevent the gross inequality and misery which now prevail. The trouble is that we are now trying to administer an industrial commonwealth upon habits and principles of competition derived from the Feudal system. It is, in a word, comminuted robbery. The old robbers of the castles, and their victims and serfs, have their representatives in monopolists, speculators, and employers, with their exclusive and unjust gains and herds of wage-slaves, who are not sure of subsistence from day to day—not so sure as Gurth, the Saxon in "Ivanhoe," was of his pork from the swine he tended for his lord Cedric—not even so sure as Cuffee was of his meal out of the corn he raised for his Southern master.

Now there is nothing in the science of sociology if such injustice cannot be removed by realizing a greater social equity. The reign of peace should not be less just or merciful than the wages, salary, pension, and ration systems which are used in all military administration. The equity which calls for the adoption and wise application of these means of payment or distribution in the regime of industrial war for subsistence against Nature's bounty is evident. It is the fact well proved that all riches, wealth, or property are social in their origin and should be in their destination. Society, nay, Humanity itself, stands back of the laborer, and receives from his total work a product which goes on increasing in its results and value for ages. It follows that the wages paid to the laborers are on the average but a fraction of the value of the total work to society. Hence there is a general increase of wealth, but the competition of laborers for the opportunity to work prevents any great increase of their wages, and they hav no share in the surplus. The result is that, by this competition with each other for a chance to labor, the poor tend to become constantly poorer, and the capitalist, as a class, richer, and now more than ever is this so by means of science and machinery, which employers chiefly own or control.

Equity requires that this surplus product of labor should be redistributed to the producers, and that it should be recognized as the fund from which especially the producers of society, to wit, the women and children, should have a property and a subsistence sufficient at least to prevent starvation and misery. As society now stands, there is no equitable division of the spoils of industrial war. This could be readily brought about by adjustment of the (1) wages, (2) salary, and (3) pension systems to peaceful industry as well as to war.

It might be done this wise, as a suggestion: As the Feudal system goes out of use we shall have more and more a commonwealth of laborers and producers under capitalists. While employed, they will receive wages to support themselves and those dependent upon them. In proportion to their years of labor they should, when disabled by age or otherwise, have a pension, as well as the soldier on the retired list, for himself and family. For the sustenance of women a regular pension should be provided so as to secure their comfort and independence; nor less should support be provided during the education of their children. The professional classes should be made salaried public servants—such as professors, inventors, teachers, physicians—while the lawyers should be made notaries, cousellors, judges, and arbitrators, rather than mere advocates, as at present. In this way all of the social advantages derived from the learned professions would be secured, while their numbers could be largely decreased. They should be compensated by salaries, to be lessened and turned to pensions on retirement from active service. The fee system should be everywhere strictly prohibited as a source of extortion and corruption. Tramps, vagrants, or those unable to find any employment, should be employed by the town or county at lesser wages than usually paid. By such provisions as these every person would be assured of a livelihood by reasonable exertion, and the great terror of life—want, poverty, and misery, especially in sickness and old age—would be impossible to man, woman, or child.

Why should not this result be attained when the labor of adults for five or six hours per day would abundantly provide for all? Why should not the surplus of labor, which belongs on every principle of production and equity to the producer or to society, be thus equitably redistributed instead of being left in the hands of a few men, as the result of cunning or accident rather than justice?

If it is asked, Whence will come the immense fund for these wages, pensions, and salaries? the reply is easy: The surplus of the products of labor already raises this fund, as above stated; but it goes largely into the wrong hands, and is wasted in luxuries and follies. We may intimate some sources of income thus. 1. A graduated income tax would do much to remedy this great wrong. 2. The ground rents over a certain per cent would be another source of income, as Henry George has proposed. 3 The income from railroads and telegraphs would be another large source. 4. A tariff or tax on alcoholics, tobacco, luxuries, etc., would be another resource. 5. A tax on transfers and descending estates over a certain sum would still remain, as Mr. Edward Clarke has proposed. These steps could be taken in the present state of society.

Such taxes would soon change a society composed largely of drones, sharpers, and parasites into producers or professions useful to them. The change of distribution would not be so great and beneficial in amount as in its certainty and equity. For instance, most women and children are now wholly or largely supported by men, but in a way often precarious and humiliating, and by those who should not—bachelors and widowers not fairly contributing. It would be easier for all to have this support collected and distributed surely and equitably. The woman should never be forced to compete with men in manual labor. They have a more important service and a higher duty to Humanity to perform. As we emerge from barbarism, our women will be called out from the field and the shop, but will not be left to starve in consequence.

Nor let it be supposed that this mode of co-operation and insurance against want will be humiliating. On the contrary, it will be, and will be felt to be, the simplest justice and equity taking the place of present injustice and wrong—the giving to each his due; that is all!

Nor will the motives to exertion be lessened. The worker will do his best to earn and to make his retiring pension as large and as early as possible. The employer and Captain of Industry will be honored by his success and the large amount he can contribute to this "commonwealth," as Generals are honored in war; while co-operation in production and distribution would become possible, and be extended to many departments where thousands are now striving, without any benefit to the public, to displace each other. The women, not being materially dependent, will for the first time act and live from affection, and for the care of home and children. They would be proud to show that they are worthy of the indispensable duties which nature and the commonwealth require of them. Nor will the learned professions be compelled as now to sacrifice their talents, meant for Humanity, to the sordid arts of money getting. It will for the first time be to their interest to make and keep the community intelligent, healthy, and peaceful, instead of otherwise, as is now the case, under the fee system, by which they are rewarded in proportion as the people are ignorant, sick, and litigious.

This brings us to the consideration of the functions of these learned professions under the social Republican regime.

The Epidemic at Montreal.

The terrible pestilence which for several months has been raging in the beautiful city of Montreal, carrying away thousands of its inhabitants, teaches a painful lesson of the malign consequences to a community of ignorance and superstition when strong enough to set at defiance the resources that intelligent experience has furnished to arrest its progress. It is not as if the people had been struck by some new and mysterious disease before which they were powerless. It is not as with the plagues of former ages, when nothing was known that could be done to arrest them. The saddest aspect of the Montreal calamity is not that multitudes hav been swept into unripe graves, but that this vast mortality could hav been avoided. That small-pox is practically a preventable disease is established; but to what purpose when all the apparatus of self-defense in a civilized community is completely paralyzed? A comparativly small element of the population, ignorant, prejudiced, and pious, makes a blind and desperate resistance to the only measures that can bring relief, and they resort to penance, invocation of saints, prayers to heaven, and solemn processions to arrest the course of contagion, over which these hav no more influence than they would hav to arrest the course of the St.

Lawrence! The chief ravages of the disease hav been confined to that portion of the French Canadians who were unvaccinated. But such has been the passion of religious fanaticism, and the intensity of race hatred, that this small minority made a fight stubborn enough to defeat all effectual public action. There hav been defiance of authority and constant danger of mob violence, which hav intimidated the controling officials and so diminished their effectivness. The authorities in charge of the leading hospital of St. Roche are said to hav favored neither vaccination nor sanitation, and such was the inefficient and horrible condition of that old establishment that many advocated burning it down.—Popular Science Monthly.

Remarkable Seances in Barre, Mass.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: By referring to The Truth Seeker for March 14th, May 9th, and June 27th, it will be seen that I vindicated Mr. Truesdell by stating that he said he performed the manifestations attributed to the spirits of the dead, and that they were simply tricks. I there urged that if he did not perform them as he claimed then he was a liar and fraud, as charged by his enemies, admitting thus far his guilt. Remember, I there stated that he "said" he performed them, and "if" he did not he was a liar, etc. I am now prepared to drop the "said" and "if" and to affirm from my own observation and personal experience that he does perform them, having witnessed his feats in two seances on the evenings of August 29th and 30th at our residence in Barre, Mass.

Let me say at the outset that Mr. Truesdell consented to sit only with a view of explaining, after the circles were over, that spirits in the body were the only ones that had anything to do with the phenomena.

It will be impossible in a newspaper article to convey any adequate conception of these performances. Suffice to say, of the eighteen different persons present, besides Mr. Truesdell, my sister, and myself, not one was cognizant of the fact that Mr. Truesdell himself was the spirit who played the "Bottom Facts" that so astounded them. He first got en rapport with the circle through the ballot test, a la Charles Foster, opening the ballots and reading them while sharpening his pencil—Foster performing the same feat while lighting his cigar (see "Bottom Facts," pp. 133–142). He next pretended to see spirits, and by these methods forced his circle unwittingly to giv him all the information he had, which he cleverly handed back to them, they all marveling at his wonderful knowledge!

Mr. Truesdell performed slate-writing in many different ways, all apparently independent, but afterward explained several methods, showing conclusivly that he did the writing instead of spirits of the dead —another evidence that things are not always what they seem, and that "it is never safe to bet on a man's own game."

One test was as follows: Mr. Truesdell called for two slates, asking the circle to make a careful examination to see that there was no writing on them, put a grain of pencil between them, and tie them together closely by cords passing around all sides of the slates. A critical person in the presence of us all, in strong light, did the work as directed, tying the strings in hard knots and then cutting the ends off closely so that they could not be easily untied, even by a person using both hands; these slates were then placed upon the open right hand of Mr. Truesdell (this being the first time he had touched them, if our senses can be relied upon), while his left was at all times during the exploit in plain sight of all. A goblet nearly filled with water was then placed upon the slates, when all was passed under the leaf of the table and then elevated until the top of the goblet pressed against the under surface of the table.

Mr. Truesdell then put both feet on an ottoman in plain view of all, he sitting with his right side next the table, and, at least, one foot away from it. After all was arranged members of the circle were allowed to look under the table and see the position of the slates and Mr. Truesdell. As soon as all were satisfied Mr. Truesdell said, as nearly as I can remember: "This test is an exact duplicate of the one given by Mrs. Simpson, the celebrated medium of Chicago, to Rev. Minot J. Savage, who was so impressed with it at the time that he declared it was apparently impossible for the medium to do the writing in that position. The Spiritualists made a good deal of capital out of this, and half counted on Mr. Savage as a convert to their cause, but 'there is many a slip between the cup and the lip' [here Mr. Truesdell's listeners began to stare]. Mr. Savage has since changed his mind, for last January, at the Clifton House, in Chicago, in the presence of a western editor who had published a challenge to giv one thousand dollars to anyone who would perform the same test in the presence of the same witnesses, I exhibited to Mr. Savage this phenomena, and, after making them both promis not to expose the trick, I thoroughly explained it to them. [More staring and exclamations from the circle.] Now to prove to you all that if writing appears upon the slates I now hold, it was not done before the slates were passed under the table, let some one call for something to be written—a spirit or name." Here three names were given, and pretty soon Mr. Truesdell announced that the writing had taken place. On withdrawing the slates they were cut apart by the one who had tied them, and, to the surprise of all, the names indicated were found written upon the upper side of the lower slate. Mr. Truesdell refused to tell how this was done to the company, as also a similiar test the evening previous, when the slates were first laid on the hand of a gentleman, then Mr. Truesdell's hand placed under his, and the goblet of water placed on the slate, when "I am here" was found written on the slate under the same conditions. As Mr. Truesdell explained others fully as intricate, all were satisfied that it was as he said, simply a trick, and I am forced to believe it, yea, know it, as he gave me proofs not awarded the circle, under promis of secrecy until he is ready to divulge in his forthcoming book.

Another test. The slates were tied together as before, and, apparently not leaving our sight, were placed on the center of the table, when, after about five minutes, writing was heard, and, on opening the slates, two well-written messages appeared. For explanation of this trick see "Bottom Facts," page 143. The slates were simply changed, the messages written in the afternoon, and the names signed to one that was obtained the night previous, and to the other after the circle was convened.

Another. Mr. Truesdell asked a member of the circle to clean a slate and hold it on the palm of his hand, and, after placing some bits of pencil upon the upper surface of the slate, to pass it under the table and close up to the leaf. After he had done so then Mr. Truesdell put his right hand under the other person's, and in this shape writing was heard, and when the slate was withdrawn, a long message, directed to the holder, was found.

Mr. Truesdell informed me that Mrs. Simpson had never performed this trick, to his knowledge.

Names were made to appear on Mr. Truesdell's arm which were explained and illustrated. See "Bottom Facts," page 167. "Ella" and "Mary" were obtained the first evening through a member of the circle inadvertently giving them away, which put Mr. Truesdell in possession of the names; so on the second day he labored diligently with pencil, knives, gum-arabic, etc., to transfer these names to pasteboard for the evening's use, and so far succeeded as to exhibit to the astonished gaze of the mothers of these women and to the circle—"Ella" and "Mary"—the former in large capitals, and the latter in italic letters on his arm in deep indentations. These pasteboards are still in my possession and afford ocular demonstration of the truth of Mr. Truesdell's asseveration, "I know I did it myself." Besides he placed his dies on the arm of a lady present, before us all, and the same name was produced that had been seen on his own arm, said to hav been done by spirits, when the modus operandi is concealed from view.

To produce the raised letters on the arm another process can be resorted to, viz.: take a match and write with the phosphorous end on the arm rather heavily, and the letters will appear, after rubbing, in red, swollen lines.

I do not believe there is a medium in the world who can sit down in the same circumstances as Mr. Truesdell did in our house and giv as many tests, and such good ones of their kind. Each medium has some particular "phase," but none excels in more than one or two, while Mr. Truesdell combined some four or five phases of the most noted mediums, Slade, Mansfield, Foster, Watkins, Caffray, and last, but not least, Mrs. Simpson; and Mr. Truesdell really surpasses her at her own game, for in the report of that famous sitting of Savage's with her—when the slates were tied together, no writing of any account occurred —a few illegible scratches at one time, and a name very badly written at another, but when the glass of water rested on an open single slate the writing was clear and distinct, showing conclusivly that she did it; while Mr. Truesdell wrote in the same position a good, fair communication.

The way Mr. Truesdell discovered her trick I am not permitted to divulge. He visited her for that purpose and succeeded—itself a trick second to none that any medium now performs to deceive a gullible public.

If Mr. Truesdell can thus deceive even the very elect, and is but occasionally practicing these tricks, cannot those whose only business is mediumship perform them likewise? Mr. Truesdell allowed me, on the second evening, to sit in such a position that I could plainly see him open and carelessly read the ballots, unobserved, however, by other members of the circle who were not as fortunate as myself; and I know that he wrote some of his messages before the circle convened, that he changed the slates, and he showed me his tools by and with which he did the writing. Therefore I am sure he is justified in declaring. "I know I do it myself," even though his Spiritualistic friends to this day declare "spirits do it!" Now, if he so deceives them, or they are so self-deceived, notwithstanding all his protestations to the contrary, may not others be deceived in the same way by mediums who are using every endeavor to make them believe that spirits are the agents employed in the phenomena?

I will only add, for this article is already too long, that while I believe that these mediums are thus deceiving, I should consider myself recreant to the truth that I so dearly love, and for which I hav sacrificed so much, if, knowing what I do know, I should hold my peace, and not to cry aloud and spare not, in the language of scripture, while this imposition is being perpetrated upon thousands of innocent, unsuspecting victims, whose only defect is their ignorance and credulity. Ella E. Gibson.

How a Miracle Might Hav Been Performed.

M. Boutibouse, the French savant, served in Napoleon's army, and was in the heat of the battle of Wagram. While reloading his musket he was shot down by a cannon-ball. The ball seemed to pass through his legs, completely severing them below the knees, and he sank down about a foot. His body fell back on the ground and his senses were paralyzed by the shock. Thus he lay among the wounded and dead all night, not daring to move when consciousness partially returned, lest the loss of blood should be increased and death ensue in a few minutes. He felt no pain, but he thought this was because of the shock on his nervous system, and he was mentally too numbed to be able to reason as to why he had not already bled to death. Early in the morning an army doctor came around and asked him what was the matter. M. Boutibouse replied that his legs had been carried off by a cannon-ball. The doctor made an examination and then said, "Get up; there is nothing the matter with your legs." M. Boutibouse sprang up in astonishment and found that he had not been wounded at all. He had been shot down by a cannon-ball, but the ball had passed under his feet, making a hole in the ground, into which he had suddenly fallen, and the shock and apparent shortening of stature had given him the impression that his legs had been shot off.

When, by any means, an impression is made on the sensorium that a certain thing has happened or that we see, hear, or feel anything, the sensation is as real to the subject as if the supposed occurrence had actually taken place, though there is in fact nothing of the kind. This accounts for a large percentage of the so-called Spiritual phenomena, materialization, etc., all of which are illusion, when wilful deception is absent, and by which the so-called medium is probably often deceived as well as his or her staring dupes. See how as good a miracle as any of Christ's might hav been performed in the case above related. Suppose a person of known integrity and truthfulness had come to M. Boutibouse in the night and made inquiry and the supposed wounded man had made a solemn declaration that his legs had been shot off and he had only a few hours to liv, had sent word to his family, etc, and suppose the interrogator had then been called suddenly away without making a personal examination and had gone home and sent word to the newspapers all over the country about the sad fate of his friend, stating that he had received the account of the death-shot from the dying man's own lips. Upon producing M. Boutibouse, alive and well, some years after, would it not hav been easy to hav convinced ignorant, superstitious people that a miracle had been performed? The age of miracles will never pass away as long as bipeds, professedly human, march up and down the aisles of a church carrying a statue of the Madonna "elevated on a dais," and crucifixes and swinging censers, for the purpose of securing the intercession of the Virgin Mary to arrest the ravages of the small-pox. The only means of overcoming these idiocies is by the propagation of children who will place the reasoning faculty above all others. It is pretty well demonstrated that this power is given only to those of a certain conformation of brain, hence by persistent cultivation of the reasoning faculty the proportion of offspring with brains of the proper shape and texture will increase through the influence of hereditary tendencies. Let everyone who professes to be even partially free aid to the extent of his or her ability in the cultivation of reason and we may rest assured that the "fittest will survive."

What has become of Mary Baird Finch, the "sweet singer" of Nebraska? Her poetic talent, compared with that of the majority of rhymesters, is like a meteor to a rush-light. I hope The Truth Seeker will get more songs from her brilliant pen. N. G. W.

A Burning Question.

The Independent has published testimony from Presbyterian, Methodist, Dutch Reformed, and Quaker sources, that Sir Moses Montefiore has not, according to orthodox belief, gone to "endless sorrow."

One point in all this testimony cannot be missed—that is, that the opinion of the witnesses is only their beliefs. None of them can know, and it would be a senseless chatter were it not that Christianity had inculcated the hideous dogma that there is a hell for all unbelievers, and so drilled the people in that dogma that to most Christians their hell is a reality. The effort to keep the soul of Sir Moses out of that hell is but an indication that the people are breaking away from that belief.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 5, 1885.

The Museum Question.

We print elsewhere what a couple of Christian journals hav to say to our request to the museum trustees to open the institutions under their control on Sundays. The remarks of the Mail and Express were to be expected; the vulgar slander of the Observer is also characteristic of that paper. The object of both journals is to influence the public men and private citizens of the city not to sign the petition. In this they hav been, so far, unsuccessful. The Observer uses the conviction of D. M. Bennett as an argument for closing the museums on Sunday. No one, however, has cited the fact that Jesus Christ was executed for a malefactor as a reason for opening them on that day. Yet one has as much to do with the question as the other.

Practically, the great public of New York is with us. The only question is, Shall a small minority of Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists hav more influence with the museum trustees than the public at large? At Chickering Hall, last Sunday, about fourteen hundred people listened to Felix Adler's lecture in favor of the movement, and everyone agreed with him. So it is with the labor organizations and the working men generally. Almost without exception they favor Sunday opening. The Germans, who constitute a considerable portion of New York's population, are solid for the new departure. The city's officers, and judges of our courts, who from their positions are well qualified to judge of the beneficent effect of the change, are almost unanimous. On the petitions which hav already been returned to the secretary of the Union are names of many men prominent in municipal affairs. In religious belief they vary from Catholic to Infidel. Among them are:

S. B. French (President), Police Commissioner.
J. J. Porter, " "
John R. Voorhis, " "
E. Duyfous.
William H. Kipp, Chief Clerk Police Commissioners.
John Henry McCarthy, Judge Fifth District Court, and 38 others.
Carl Jussen, Secretary Fire Department, and eight others.
G. F. Britton, Sec. Department Charities and Corrections.
Rollin M. Squire, Commissioner Public Works, and 5 others.
D. Lowber Smith, Deputy Commissioner Public Works, and 17 others.
John H. Chambers, Register (Water) Dept. P. W.
Joseph Blumenthal, Supt. Bureau of Incumbrances
Martin J. Reese, Keeper of Buildings in City Hall Park, and 11 others.
Adolph L. Sanger, President of the Board of Aldermen.
Jacob Seabold, Deputy Commissioner Department Street Cleaning.
M. J. Morrison, Chief Clerk Depart. Street Cleaning, and 8 others.
Michael Coleman, President Dept. Taxes and Assessments.
Alston Culver, Water Purveyor Dept. Public Works.
Charles H. Woodman, Secretary and Executiv Officer Civil Service Supervisory and Examining Board.
Ferdinand Levy, Coroner.
Henry P. McGown, Justice Ninth Judicial District Co urt, and 5 others.
R. P. H. Abell, Book-Keeper City Record, and 13 others.
Patrick Keenan, County Clerk, and 14 others.
Thomas W. Byrnes, Police Inspector, and 10 others.
Alfred Steckler, Judge Fourth Judicial District Court, and 14 others.
Thomas Boese, Chief Clerk Superior Court, and 36 others.
Randolph B. Martine, District Attorney.
William N. Penny, Assistant District Attorney.
Delancey Nicol, " " " Gunning S. Bedford, " " "
Ambrose H. Purdy, " " " Julius Catlin, Jr., " " "
Edward L. Parris, " " "
John Sparks, Clerk General Sessions
Andrew J. White, (ex-nominee for Sheriff of County Democracy.)
G. W. Cregier, Secretary 6th District Police Court.
David McAdam, Chief Justice City Court of N. Y.
Recorder Frederick Smyth (Court of General Sessions).
Maurice J. Power, Judge 1st Police Court, and 11 officers of the court.
Michael Norton, Judge 1st Judicial District Court, and 10 officers of the court.
David E. Austen, Deputy Auditor, sends 35 names besides his own.
J. Henry Ford, Judge Court of Special Sessions.
J. T. Kilbreth, " " "
Charles P. Daly, Chief Justice Court of Common Pleas.
Nathaniel Jarvis, Chief Clerk " " "
B. W. Ellison, Secretary Department Docks,
John M. Coman, Chief Clerk District Attorney's Office.
F. G. Gedney, Judge 8th District Court.
Charles M. Clancy, Justice 2d District Civil Court, signs "with pleasure."
Benj. S. Church, Chief Engineer Aqueduct Commissioners.

In returning the petition sent to him, Judge Norton says:

"I herewith return your paper with a few names, together with my own, as fully approving the good work that your Union is doing in behalf of the great body of workers of our city that hav been deprived of so many of their rights."

Judge Gedney writes:

"I am a strong believer in the law of substitution—one thing for another; and while men are educating themselvs by studying works of art and good books, they certainly are not occupied in matters which destroy them; but in museums and libraries they learn that which elevates them and makes them better citizens. We must not blame men who lead wicked lives if they know of no other."

There can be no doubt that the Sunday opening is desired by the best portion of the community, and the trustees of the museums ought to recognize the will of the people. We understand that the late Wm. E. Dodge, of tin statuary fame, left twenty thousand dollars to the museums on the condition that the managers shall keep the doors locked on Sunday. This bequest should not be accepted. Some time ago the public were taxed $162,500 to enlarge the Metropolitsn Museum of Art. Annually $15,000 has been given it. How much the American Museum of Natural History has drawn from the state we do not know. If the trustees persist in shutting the public out of the buildings paid for by the people, let them refund every cent received, take the buildings off the public's real estate, and run them as private enterprises. Then the city might take the matter up and build some museums of its own. It would receive back money enough to do so.

In Washington, D. C., the ministers hav formed a league to resist the opening on Sundays of the National Museum. We hav not as yet learned of any such organization in this city, but it may be expected. Then will come the tug of war.

Our Level-Headed Tax Commissioner.

Michael Coleman, president of the Department of Taxes and Assessments of this city, was before the Senate investigating committee a few days since. He gave the committee considerable information interesting to the tax-payer. There is, he said, about $267,000,000 worth of property in this city exempt by act of the legislature. Considerable over $40,000,000 of this belongs to churches. Commissioner Coleman mentioned as the most conspicuous property down town exempted from taxation, the cemeteries attached to Trinity and St. Paul's churches. The property of the Trinity corporation, the commissioner said, was worth millions of dollars, and was increasing in value all the time. By actual calculation the property was worth about $100 per square foot. The commissioner mentioned as other property which pays no taxes, and which should be taxed, the Jewish cemeteries in the Fourth and Sixteenth Wards, and the Catholic cemetery between East Eleventh and East Twelfth streets, in none of which, as in Trinity and St. Paul's cemeteries, burials are now made.

Another flagrant exemption he mentioned is Bloomingdale Insane Asylum, occupying all the property between 112th and 120th streets and the Boulevard and Tenth avenue. The asylum pays no taxes, and is a bar to improvements in that part of the city. It is not a charitable institution in any sense, and it has no just claim to the exemption from taxation. The property occupies an area of about seventy-five acres, and the income of the asylum is far ahead of its expenses. Every patient in the asylum has to pay from fifteen to fifty dollars per week.

The Catholics hav an institution of so-called learning in this city, which can be patronized only by the children of the wealthy, named the Convent of the Sacred Heart. As it stands it is an obstruction to public improvement, preventing the cutting of all the streets through for several blocks. It is, of course, exempt from taxes. At the last session of the legislature, Mr. Coleman said, the legislature exempted several other parcels of private property. The owner put a few children and old women in some houses, and succeeded in having a bill passed exempting the property from taxation.

"All anybody has to do," added the commissioner, "is to go up town, put up a building, or buy a field, and call it after some saint if he wants to get the property exempted from taxation."

Other places mentioned by Mr. Coleman as unjustly exempted, and which he considered should be shown no such favor, are the Young Men's Christian Association building, the Masonic Temple, and the Academy of Medicine.

Mr. Coleman seems to be a level-headed man. No property should be exempt from taxation but that owned by the state or towns and muncipalities.

The Andre and the Paine Monuments.

A few years ago Cyrus W. Field built at Tappan, this state, a monument to the spy, Andre, who was hanged during the Revolution. To complete the insult to Americans and make his toadyism to British "aristocracy" more noticeable, he induced an English churchman, Dean Stanley, to write the inscription on the stone. A year or two ago the monument was partially demolished, but was rebuilt by Field. George Hendrix, the young printer who was supposed to hav caused the damage, shortly thereafter came to a violent end, and the prosecution of the person who caused his death was mysteriously hushed up. This fall some patriotic but law-breaking American completed the demolition of the monument.

Naturally, Mr. C. W. Field is exceedingly wroth, and vents his rage on all possible occasions, which occasions would not be very frequent did he not own an organ, known as the Mail and Express, called by its disrespectful afternoon contemporaries the Male in Distress, presumably referring to Cyrus W. This organ, having stormed and fumed through the ascending and descending scale of rage over the destruction of the Andre monument, on the 19th ult. found itself exhausted until this bright idea hit it:

"For three-quarters of a century there has stood on the highway leading into New Rochelle a conspicuous monument inscribed to 'Thomas Paine, Author of "Common Sense."' It is an offense to every decent man that passes it. It is an attempt to honor a thoroughly dishonorable man, who was repeatedly dismissed from positions of confidence for breaches of trust, who uttered a most scandalous and virulent assault on George Washington, and who was one of the most blasphemous Infidels that ever lived in trouble and died in dishonor.

"And yet this monument, as it stands there, untouched by hostil hands, is a tribute to the law-abiding spirit of the community that will not resort to vandalism to get rid of it, but rather endures the offensiv sight than adopt any cowardly dynamite methods to destroy it. It is rather strange, however, that such a monument in honor of Atheism and Anarchy and dishonesty should be allowed to stand untouched, while one whose purpose is 'not to perpetuate the record of strife, but in token of those better feelings which hav since united two nations, one in race, one in language, and one in religion,' should be repeatedly assaulted in the most cowardly manner."

We trust the foregoing has permanently eased the mind of Cyrus. But to show in what differing estimates Thomas Paine is held, we will quote the comment of the World upon this screech of unreflecting rage. The World says:

"Where one man in the United States can be found to contemn Thomas Paine ten thousand can be found who believe that John Andre was a spy, and that when he was found disguised inside the American lines seeking an interview with a traitor engaged in betraying the sacred cause of Liberty he deserved the death that George Washington permitted him to die."

We prefer that others should speak for our hero, for we may be thought predjudiced. We quote again, this time from a journal of Roman Catholic proclivities, the St. Louis Republican. The date is November 20, 1885, and the editorial is a comparison of John Bright of England, and Thomas Paine, once a resident of the same country:

"LONDON, November 19.—Mr. Bright, speaking at Birmingham last night, said he thought that the days of great and powerful estates were passing away. He favored a wide distribution of land, abolition of the game laws, and more equal taxation.

"Verily the world moveth, and such items as this not only indicate the direction of the movement, but enable us to form some idea of its rate. Nobody in or out of England is now surprised, much less startled, by the views of Mr. Bright. He has long held them, and never hesitated to proclaim them publicly whenever proper opportunity offered. In short, they are a part of that broad and comprehensiv political creed peculiarly his own, which has given him a personal popularity and power second to no other man in England save Gladstone. Conservativ organs and orators may criticise the Birmingham speech rather sharply, and some tender-footed Liberals may mildly object to its characteristic features; but the speaker will be treated with sufficient respect, and there is not a lunatic in the three kingdoms crazy enough to suggest that he ought to be punished by the law for expressing such opinions.

"Yet what John Bright can do with perfect impunity in 1885, Thomas Paine was prosecuted for doing in 1791-92. In these years appeared Paine's famous 'Rights of Man,' being a reply to Edmund Burke's once famous 'Reflections on the French Revolution.' To Burke that revolution was the sum of all political iniquities and horrors, and he discussed it accordingly. To Paine, who had breathed the atmosphere of the American Revolution, its French successor was the death-knell of consecrated tyranny in Europe, the dawn of liberty for oppressed millions—and he discussed it accordingly. On the one side was the splendid eloquence of perhaps the greatest master of English rhetoric the world has seen enlisted in the cause of the divine rights of royalty and aristocracy. On the other side was plain, incisiv common sense, strong and fearless logic, defending the divine rights of democracy and equality. Then, of course, Burke was, by the vast majority of readers, considered the victor. Now a much larger majority assign the victory to Paine; and the 'Reflections' would hardly be read at all, but for the reply which demolished it. In these ninety-three years popular sentiment has been marching further and further away from the political principles of Burke and nearer and nearer to the political principles of Paine.

"Though the 'Rights of Man' was primarily devoted to a vindication of the French Revolution, the author did not confine himself to France, but pointed out those English institutions which he thought demanded either radical reform or complete destruction. He, like Bright, predicted 'that the days of great and powerful estates were passing away;' he, like Bright, 'favored a wide distribution of land, abolition of the game laws, and more equal taxation;' and we very much doubt whether the arguments used at Birmingham last Wednesday were as powerful and convincing as those employed by Paine nearly a century before. How effectiv these latter were may be inferred from the fact that a few weeks after the appearance of the second part of the 'Rights of Man' the government issued a proclamation against 'wicked and malicious publications.' Paine's book was not mentioned by name, but the proclamation was specially intended to reach it, for on the very same day the attorney-general commenced a prosecution of the author, who would certainly hav been fined and imprisoned had he not fled the country while the trial was pending to take his seat in the French National Convention as member for the department of Calais. Nor did he ever dare to again put his foot on English soil.

"It may, then, be remembered to the credit of Thomas Paine, when so much is alleged to his discredit, that ninety-three years ago he anticipated and advocated the very same changes in England which are now being urged on English platforms and in English journals, and that nineteen years before John Bright was born he narrowly escaped severe punishment in purse and person for writing and printing what Bright may now preach to applauding audiences from one end of the island to the other. If England has gone so far in the direction of the 'rights of man' in the last century, where is she liable to go in the next? And who was the wiser prophet in 1792, Edmund Burke or Thomas Paine?"

Slowly the right comes uppermost. Let us call as our next witness the New York Sun, edited by Mr. Charles A. Dana. The Sun says:

"Mr. Cyrus W. Field's newspaper, the Mail and Express, declares that the monument to Thomas Paine at New Rochelle is 'an offense to every decent man that passes it,' and expresses surprise 'that such a monument, in honor of Atheism and Anarchy and dishonesty, should be allowed to stand untouched,' while Mr. Field's monument to Andre has been 'repeatedly assaulted in the most cowardly manner.'

"And yet Mr. Cyrus W. Field is an American and his newspaper is published in the chief city of the republic whose establishment was largely due to the passionate love of liberty with which Thomas Paine animated his countrymen!

"When the Revolution was over, it will be remembered, Congress voted to this ardent patriot a sum of money for his inestimable services during the period of trial; and the state of New York gave him a house and a farm of three hundred acres at New Rochelle, where the monument to which Mr. Field objects was placed.

"The men who conquered our independence honored Thomas Paine as an apostle of liberty and democracy who had kept his courage strong when others quailed. They knew that he, more perhaps than any other, had fired the heart of the people with a desire for freedom, and that he had been from the first the great disseminator of democratic ideas, the ideas which hav borne their fruit in the great republic of to-day. Other enemies of England could not throw off aristocratic prejudices and misgivings, but Paine, like Jefferson, never doubted the people or their capacity for self-government.

"Thomas Paine was a light on a hill during the Revolution, and shed warmth and illumination all around. He was a man of enthusiasm, and gave his whole heart to the patriotic cause. If he was a skeptic in religion, he did not go so far as very many of the doubters of this period, both inside and outside of the church, for he believed in God and a future life, while they hav no faith whatever, and believe only in what they see or what can be demonstrated to the reason.

"Yet Mr. Cyrus W. Field's paper cannot understand why American citizens honor the memory of Thomas Paine, the patriot and democrat, and are outraged by the erection of a monument to the British spy hanged by Washington!"

Thus the language of the Mail and Express, as applied to Paine, becomes simply silly vituperation. To show that the writer is only some hired intellectual ruffian totally unacquainted with the history of the man he was abusing, it is only necessary to point out the errors in the two paragraphs. The first error is in the first sentence:

1. The monument to Paine has not stood for three-quarters of a century. It was erected in 1839. 2. It is not an offense to any decent man—only to such fellows as Field and his writers. 3. Instead of being an attempt to honor a dishonorable man, it is a successful endeavor to keep green in the hearts of at least a few people, the memory of a man who did as much as any other one man—and more than any one other, except Washington—to free this country from British rule. 4. Paine was never dismissed from a position of confidence for a breach of trust. 5. It is true Paine attacked Washington, but Washington deserved it. 6. Paine was not a blasphemer, and (7) did not liv in trouble, nor (8) die in dishonor. 9. This monument has been touched by hostil hands, and has had to be restored, to the eternal shame of the Christians. 10. Paine was not an Atheist, but a Deist, and he was not an Anarchist.

We do not sympathize with the destroyers of the Andre monument. The land on which it stood belonged to Mr. Field. He paid for the monument, and paid for the inscription. All that was his right, and no one had a legal or moral right to destroy the monument. Let Mr. Field do as he pleases with his own; he should be punished only by the contempt of the public for his toadyism. But when considering the brutal attack of Mr. Field's journal upon the reputation of Thomas Paine, we lament the insufficiency of the English language to properly describe its infamous character. We can, however, rejoice in the fact that among really honorable people Thomas Paine is beginning to receive that justice and honor to which his services to the United States of America entitle him. His friends can well afford to treat with contempt such impotent slander as this friend of a detected spy is given to indulging in.

Editorial Notes.

Says E. H. Heywood: "'Social Wealth,' by J. K. Ingalls, is the most exact and comprehensiv exposition of politico-industrial economy ever published. Labor, price, value, trade, money are clearly defined in the light of fundamental equity; interest, rent, and all other forms of speculativ profit are conclusivly shown to hav no basis whatever in essential right; all the great problems involved in labor reform are solved by the free play of natural forces incarnate in human being. It is a book which should be studied in every school and home, especially by all interested to travel toward abolition of poverty, through knowledge of the whole truth about labor."

In The Truth Seeker of October 31st, our correspondent "Laokoon" had an article on "The Trojan Horse," etc., in which he used a Latin phrase. In The Truth Seeker of November 21st, another correspondent, "N. G. W.," criticised "Laokoon's" Latin. "Laokoon" writes that the Latin in his "copy" was all right, but that our compositor blundered and the proof reader failed to detect the error. This may be so, for printers and proof readers are human. "Laokoon's" manuscript has not been preserved, and comparison is now out of the question. "N. G. W." will, therefore, please transfer his criticism to the printer, whose shoulders are broad, and to the proof-reader, who is indurated.

In the Milwaukee Sunday Telegraph of the 15th ult, Dr. Juliet H. Severance trains what the editor terms a "six-gun battery" against the opponents of woman suffrage. She concludes with these ringing sentences: "The women who are, and hav been all these years, laboring for woman's political recognition in the government she helps to maintain, are thoughtful, earnest, loyal women who understand the principles of republicanism, and long to see them fully carried out as the only way to perpetuate our liberties. Women who hav sons and daughters whose interests they wish to subserve; who love humanity and wish to make its existence more tolerable, and its possibilities for happiness greater; who are willing, with this hope for the future, to make present sacrifices, and travel the thorny road of a reformer's life with bleeding feet, bearing all the shafts of ridicule and scorn that ignorance and malice can invent, with calm, unruffled spirit trusting through the long and weary years they may be called to 'labor and wait,' to the inevitable triumph of truth." Dr. Severance should labor with Mr. Mallonee.

The two papers in the December number of the North American Review which all Freethinkers will desire to read are "Motley and Monarch," by Col. R. G. Ingersoll, and "Rome and the Inquisitions," by Alfred R. Glover. Of the last they will say it is a strange paper for a scholar to write. Colonel Ingersoll's paper is what the publishers call a "prose poem" on Abraham Lincoln. Like all of Mr. Ingersoll's writings, it is unapproachable in its way, and if Mr. Rice will not prosecute us for infringing the copyright law, we shall reproduce it. The other articles are "Halleck's Injustice to Grant," by F. D. Grant; "The Progress of Texas," by Gov. Ireland; "An Acquaintance with Grant," by J. B. Fry; "A Chapter on Monetary Policy," by S. D. Horton; "The Capture of John Brown," by Israel Green; "Johnson's Plots and Motivs," by G. S. Boutwell; "The Mistakes of Grant," by W. S. Rosecrans; "A Disfranchised People." by Editor Rice, and Note and Comments by G. P. Lathrop, F. S. Woodbury, J. N. Clark, H. Rawie, and J. W. Bell. The latter criticises Dr. Parkhurst for his misleading statement as to the growth of Christianity. The North American Review is published at 30 Lafayette Place, this city. Price, 50 cents for single numbers.

According to a correspondent of a Western journal the churches of this city choose their pastors as much for their personal beauty as for their piety. It is a positiv fact, he says, that when an assistant to a certain Fifth avenue rector was lately needed, and an application from a London young clergyman was received by the vestry, accompanied by such indorsements as to ability and sincerity as convinced them that he was the right man so far as those things were concerned, they sent back for photographs of him in order to see whether he was handsome enough to favorably impress an exacting congregation. In response to this call the applicant sent several, and also was shrewd enough to describe his complexion as clear and his hight as six feet.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. Peck writes that he will lecture for the Pittsburgh, Pa., League on the Sundays of December, and will answer calls to lecture week-days in the vicinity.

W. F. Jamieson is lecturing in Morrill and Paola, Kansas. He has calls to debate and lecture in Missouri up to Jan. 1st, and prefers to lecture in Kansas for five or six weeks after January 1st. Address him at Paola, Kan.

C. W. Stewart writes of Mr. Remsburg's visit to Ottumwa, Iowa: "Mr. John E. Remsburg has just finished a course of lectures in this city, which, in point of attendance and enthusiastic interest, hav never been excelled. Mr. Remsburg was not well when he arrived here, having hurt himself while kindly assisting a little boy on the train, but, with his characteristic energy, he went on with his lectures as if nothing nothing was wrong, and did his work splendidly. His subjects were, 'Sabbath-Breaking,' 'Bible Morals,' and 'Thomas Paine.' At the close of the last lecture a motion was made to tender the speaker a vote of thanks, which was unanimously carried. Many were the congratulations and encouraging words that poured in upon him, and he carries from here the good wishes of the intelligent people of Ottumwa. For clear, concise argument, and cultivated oratory, Mr. Remsburg has no superior on the Liberal rostrum." In addition to the work announced in his regular program, J. E. Remsburg lectured at Millsville, Wis., November 2d. He also organized a Secular Society there of which Judge Dewhurst is president, and W. S. Colville secretary. Mr. Remsburg's recent lecture on "Sabbath-Breaking" in Prescott, Iowa, was the innocent cause of considerable fervent street-preaching by a woman.

Charles Watts delivered two lectures at the Opera House, Kalamazoo, Mich., Nov. 24th and 25th, to full houses; subjects: "Secularism, Constructiv and Destructiv," and "Unbelief." This city, like all thriving Western cities, contains many people of culture ond advanced thought, and Mr. Watts's reception by them was very gratifying to him. The narrow-minded Christian element opposed him more by silent than by open demonstration, and yet among his audience were ministers and professors. Great dissatisfaction was justly felt by the gentlemen who contributed toward the lecture, from the fact that one of the city papers failed to review Mr. Watts's lectures, and to even mention the presence of that gentleman in their midst. The paper also failed to insert certain advertisments left, to be paid for, after having agreed to insert them. These gentlemen believe this was the result of contemptible design, and as they are prominent business and professional men it was poor policy on the part of the press to insult them and ignore their guest. The proprietor of the Gazette, however, Andrew J. Shakspere, is a man of liberal and cultured mind. He is the city postmaster under the new administration. After the lecture he sought out Mr. Watts and congratulated him in person. Mr. Watts was entertained while in the city by Artist A Van Sickle, and his lectures were arranged for by Author Lucius C. West, known in literature as "Uncle Lute." Mr. Watts has just concluded a most successful lecturing tour through the States, where he has been lecturing to crowded and enthusiastic audiences. He has now gone to fulfil a six-weeks' engagement in Canada, after which he returns to the States. All his Sundays for Canada are engaged, and those societies throughout the Dominion requiring him to lecture on week-nights should immediately write direct to Mr. Watts, whose address is 82 Berkeley street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

Resolutions on the Death of Elizur Wright.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: At a meeting of the National Defense Association, held Wednesday evening, Nov. 25th, the following resolutions were adopted concerning the death of our late president, the Hon. Elizur Wright:

Resolved, That in the death of the Hon. Elizur Wright, the president of our association, the cause of liberty has suffered an irreparable loss, being thereby deprived of the services of one of the stanchest advocates of freedom, who for more than half a century had devoted himself with unflagging courage to the cause of the oppressed and to the vindication of personal rights.

Resolved, That the example of this heroic officer of the Defense Association shall stimulate its members to still greater exertions in behalf of personal liberty, for which to the hour of his death our beloved leader was ready to sacrifice himself to the utmost.

Resolved, That we extend to his family our heartiest sympathy, and believe that in the hour of affliction they will find noble consolation in the memory of his years of devotion to the highest welfare of humanity.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of this association to the family of our deceased preident.

E. B. Foote, Jr.,
Secretary.

New York, Nov. 27, 1885.

Letters from Friends.

INDORSING MR. PALMER.

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 17, A.S. 285.

MR. EDITOR: I am sorry to find that so many Liberals are unwilling to work heartily in the cause of freeing honest meetings from undesired matters and things.

It seems to me that no person, even, has a better right to such freedom than has a meeting, and for the plain reason that progress in either one or the other requires it.

No end of hampering things might be brought forward, and all meetings broken up, if the principle is sound and just. The freedom of meetings requires, in my opinion, that they should be as free from annoyance of any sort as our homes are meant to be. And the officers or the major portion of the members of any meeting ought to be exactly, as in the case of a husband and family, the sole judges of what is either judicious or right to allow in or about the premises, with power to prosecute or otherwise punish transgressors. Meetings for Freethought and all other honest purposes must be really free, and that means in the sense that an honest individual or honest home is free, and can resent, stop, and punish all undesired help, hindrance, or other annoyance—and this, too, just as much in the case of a friend offering irrelevant matters as when an enemy tries to work mischief. Nothing but simple opposition to mind-slavery or religion is ever really proper in or about a mind-freeing meeting, except by consent.

Cordially yours, GEO. N. HILL.

SELBY, ONT., Nov. 18, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I do not care to meddle with other people's business, or interfere in that which does not directly concern me, but I cannot refrain from giving expression to my entire sympathy with the position Mr. Courtlandt Palmer has taken on the Albany question. Upon reading his letter on the subject I felt like grasping him warmly by the hand as a man and a brother. Nor is my opinion changed after reading the answers and criticisms of his position in the last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Most of the writers against manage to avoid the real point in issue, and the gentleman most directly concerned—Mr. Mitchell—manages to avoid the main question altogether. My intention, however, is not to reply to them (Mr. Palmer is well able to attend to that), but to express my concurrence in the eminently reasonable and proper positions taken in the premises by Mr. Palmer.

Respectfully ALLEN PRINGLE.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose you two clippings containing criticisms of Colonel Ingersoll's lecture, which, I think, may possibly hav escaped your notice, as neither is referred to in your last issue. One is from the Herald, the other from the World—the former being an editorial, while the latter is a critical report from the pen of "Nym Crinkle," a well-known dramatic critic and formerly publisher of a dramatic paper, of whom you probably hav some knowledge. He wrote a somewhat similar criticism of another of the colonel's lectures some four or five years ago, which was published in Byrne's Dramatic Times. It is easy to account for the animus of the Herald's remarks, that paper being edited by an ex-reverend; but it is somewhat difficult to understand why a man connected in any way with the stage should undertake to uphold the church, in view of the fact that the latter institution has always been bitterly opposed to the former. Judging from the tone of his remarks, this "Crinkle" must be actuated by personal spite, or else by a craving for notoriety. While I am not prepared to assert that none of his objections hav any force, I regard the bulk of his criticism as extremely silly. For instance, he ridicules the idea of Galileo and Copernicus being anything but Christians, because they were educated under Christian influences. Just as if a man could be called a Christian who promulgates a theory which flatly contradicts the Bible and upsets the whole system of theology! As such arguments as these appearing in the daily press are liable to mislead people who are incapable of reasoning logically, they should not be allowed to pass unnoticed. For this reason I send you the clippings. Fraternally yours, THOMAS JOHNSTON.

[We saw the criticisms referred to by our good friend Johnston, but did not consider them worth noticing. We hav so much to do in aggressiv movement that it is not always possible, even if desirable, to take up all the senseless criticisms of Liberals and Liberalism.—ED. T. S.]

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., Nov. 8, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I will send subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 286 before my time expires, as THE TRUTH SEEKER is indispensable gospel in my house. I would like to ask why so many of your correspondents use the Christian date 1885. Why not date from Bruno, and so shake off the last vestige of superstitious myths? I find no fault with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and only wish I had known of it years ago; but as for me and my house, we want nothing to do with Christianity or any such fables. May THE TRUTH SEEKER and its publishers liv long, and be powerful in pulling down the crumbling walls of superstition and bigotry, is the wish of your life-long friend,

WILLIAM THORPE.

MY LAST SHOT.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

MR. EDITOR: A little plain talk is in order. I clearly perceive that Materialism is treated rather rough in your establishment. Letters of a most scurrilous kind hav been willingly published in your paper against me as a Materialist, and no notice taken of my replies to these canting scribblers. This, I protest, is unfair. I am justified in my self-defense against every class, sect, or clique of religious fanatics; and I denounce that deceptiv clique called Spiritualists as the most bitter and malignant enemies of a sincere Materialist. I want no more of it, unless I can hav an equal privilege to reply to any of those abusiv bigots. THOMAS WINTER, Materialist.

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav for some time wanted to be enlightened on a subject that has long troubled my mind, in connection with evolution. I hav read all I could get hold of without being able to decide. Some things to me look like evolution, and some look like a new creation. Now, I will state briefly what has come under my own observation during my life. I hav seen three living creatures called horse-hair snakes, and they all appeared to possess intelligence enough to flee from danger as far and as fast as they could. They were all very activ and lively in their efforts to get away from us, who were looking at them, which satisfied me that they had some sense, at least to escape danger. The first two I let go, and what became of them I never knew. The last one fared worse. Several persons besides myself were standing on a moist place, waiting for a train of cars, when some one said, "See there! what is that?" I told them that it was a horse-hair snake. I was sneered at by some of the crowd. I then determined to know whether there was any horse-hair about it or not. So I followed it up, and with my left-hand thumb and forefinger caught it by the head, and with my right-hand thumb and forefinger stripped the flesh off the hair, and sure enough there was a real horse-hair. When I caught it, it struggled hard to get away, but as soon as I stripped the flesh off, the hair never moved again. I had stripped the hair so clean that all agreed that it was a real horse-hair. The hair was about eighteen inches long, and a very strong one too.

Now I will relate something more wonderful. About nine years ago I visited the Mammoth Cave, and spent the first half day exploring the short route. After supper I retired early, and about eleven o'clock that night a coach-load of visitors arrived. The roads were very dry and dusty, and all went to the wash-room and washed and combed before retiring. The one in charge of the room retired leaving everything as the guests had left it, intending to clean the room in the morning before the guests would want to use it. As I had retired early I got up early, and when I arrived at the wash-room the person in charge was there to empty the wash bowls and put things in order. All of a sudden he called me to come to him, and when I came he told me to look into a certain wash bowl and "see a wonder." Following his directions I saw from fifty to one hundred human hairs, from four to six inches long, all alive and struggling violently but unsuccessfully to get out of the bowl. They would dart from side to side, apparently trying to escape. I noticed that each hair had what appeared to be a head end. It was an enlargement similar to the root end of a hair, and in its movements that end was always ahead. They appeared to fear our approach. These hair were in the water not over six hours, and in that time became clothed with flesh, nerves and joints, and life. He nor I had seen the like before.

Now, what I want of you is that you or some of your able scientific contributors should explain what relation such creatures hav to evolution or a new creation, if any.

HIRAM VAN PELT.

MASSILLON, O., Nov. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Charles Watts delivered his lectures, as announced, on the 18th and 19th, and with satisfaction to all. We had three counties represented at the meeting. Mr. Burgess, an old-time Infidel, and a friend, came seventeen miles to hear Mr. Watts. Wayne county was represented by Mr. Robuck and a number of friends. North Lawrence, eight miles from Massillon, was represented by ten or twelve ladies and gentlemen. But the best of all was a young lady of seventeen years, attending school at Fulton, a distance of nine miles, who attended the first lecture, took boarding for the night, and returned to school next morning. I was sorry next day when hearing of it, as I would hav taken charge of her, and taken her home with me, and it should hav cost her nothing, and my wife would hav made her comfortable. All parties were pleased with the lectures, and they were pronounced to be the best that had been delivered here for a number of years. In conclusion I would say, as we all cannot be Ingersolls, Underwoods, Remsburgs, or Wattses, and as the League is in good working order, I hope that there will be no petty jealousy to destroy the harmony that is amongst us.

Yours for Freethought, ROBERT BELL.

WABASH, IND., Nov. 11, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Last night Professor W. S. Bell delivered his famous lecture, "Liberty and Morality," to a fair audience in the City Hall—the first Freethought lecture ever delivered in this city. Many came through curiosity to see what a Freethinker looked like, and went away exclaiming, "I could sit all night and hear that man. Why! I never thought a Freethinker could be so smart." Only those who hav sat and heard him on this subject can realize the power and depth of intellect that is portrayed in the delivery of this grand theme. Defining the terms both of liberty and morality, he thus showed up the false and pernicious course of the church in destroying man's individuality. Liberty, clothed with its proper definition under his oratory, shone forth enthroned as the acme of ethical culture. With it was the grandest, highest position made attainable to the human family; without it, the lowest depth of degradation was the finality. Truly (in Wabash), never man spake like this man. The mythical Christ, in all his putativ life and teachings, never produced the salvation to the square inch as did Mr. Bell, last night, in that one lecture. Now that he is gone, the dogs of theology will undoubtedly begin to bark; but if they do, one will be among them taking notes.

Yours for the destruction of myths,

ARTHUR C. EVERETT.

WILMINGTON, DEL., Nov. 9, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over the paper TRUTH SEEKER of the past week my eye fell on the article of C. F. Slight, of California. He tells us he used to be a Materialist but is now a Spiritualist, and has been the "instrument of converting many Materialists to Spiritualism." We do not contradict anyone, and will not now; but in all sober sense and reason I will ask him to explain how he knows mind to be independent of matter. Please explain also how the blood can be made to course through the body without a pump, or purified without lungs; how a man can walk without legs, or talk without a tongue. When he has time and feels inclined to answer in any way satisfactory he may be the means of converting another Materialist. Yours, C. C.

TO MRS. C. FANNIE ALLYN.

DEAR MADAM: In a recent number of THE TRUTH SEEKER I perused a little over your signature, which left some doubts on my mind, especially when I read your final point in the letter, that, after all, "our world at a time would answer you very well," etc. For years you hav taught the beautiful truths of immortality successfully, so now do we Spiritualists understand that you renounce what you hav so long taught; that you acknowledge having taught us wrong, and now go over to cold, blank Materialism, which does not offer even the poor crumbs of consolation thrown out by the churches, and which will never convert a world, because of its utter barrenness? Please let the Liberal public hear from you in regard to the above. With great respect, W. IRVING TILLOTSON.

FINGAL, ONT., Nov. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Will you grant me space in your valuable paper for a question? It is this: Why is a man who holds a plow and looks back unfit for heaven? This evening I attended a hallelujah meeting held in the Methodist church of Fingal, and about the middle of the holy man's address, he, the pastor of the said church, said, "He that holdeth the plow and looketh back is not fit for the kingdom of heaven." What harm would it do the Lord for a plowman to look back? Why should looking back make the plowman unfit for heaven? Perhaps some learned divine can tell, but for myself I fail to see any reason or sense in it. A SKEPTIC.

MAITLAND, MO., Nov. 22, 285.

MR. EDITOR: On the evenings of the 19th and 20th Helen H. Gardener delivered in this place her well known lectures, "Men, Women, and Gods," and "Historical Facts and Theological Fictions," to large and appreciativ audiences. She gave her view from a woman's standpoint, and when it was through there was not an iota left for a Christian to hold to. The theologian is not yet born, and in my judgment never will be, who will answer the first one; it is simply unanswerable. Miss Gardener brings at once to the Liberal rostrum a world of knowledge, keen sarcasm, brilliant wit, together with grand powers peculiar to the pure and noble of her sex, and energy born of deep conviction. To hear her is to be convinced. Slight in stature, gentle in mien and manner, but a giant for good in the field of reform, we hope she will be kept busy delivering these lectures. The world needs them.

H. B. MAXWELL, M.D.

CHICAGO, ILL., Nov. 17, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: We—Mr. Bell and myself—were pleasantly surprised a few days ago at seeing the genial face of that earnest self-sacrificing worker in the cause of humanity, Mr. C. P. Somerby, the business manager of the Truth Seeker Co., beam in upon us. Mr. Somerby is on a business tour in the interest of the Truth Seeker Co., with the view of introducing some of their more recent scientific and humanitarian publications into the general book trade. But in this, as in every other step the Liberals make for the improvement and betterment of the intellectual and physical condition of mankind, Mr. Somerby finds numerous obstacles thrown in his way. Even in this city of Chicago, the great metropolis of trade for the Northwest, jobbers were reluctant to take hold of books bearing the imprint of the Truth Seeker Co., no matter how meritorious the books in themselvs might be.

No one feels more keenly the power of the Christian church than does the publisher of Liberal and purely scientific and social books and papers. The Christian church, both Catholic and Protestant, through its paid hirelings, claims a censorship of the entire press of the country, and what she cannot do by the force of law and legislation, she tries to do by a well-organized system of boycotting. And to such an extent is this censorship felt by the large wholesale dealers in books and periodicals that it is with caution and hesitancy that they dare attempt to put Liberal publications upon the market.

Mr. Somerby left here last Saturday for Kansas City, and from thence he returns to his arduous duties at THE TRUTH SEEKER establishment. Mr. Somerby's stay with us was all too short. We enjoyed his society very much during the short time he was with us.

Prof. W. S. Bell, who is making his headquarters here with me for the present, is busy trying to open correspondence with the prominent Liberals of Illinois, with the view of doing some missionary work in the Liberal lecture field during the coming winter over this and the adjoining states; and I hope that anyone who is anxious to hav lectures in his town or vicinity will write him at once, so that he can arrange his routes of travel. Mr. Bell is an able lecturer, and an earnest, devoted Liberal, and he should be kept constantly at work in the lecture field.

I hav been thinking lately whether it would not be advisable to hold a state convention of the Liberals and Freethinkers of Illinois some time during the spring or summer of 1886, in order to devise and put in motion some unity of action in regard to trying to elect a state legislature that would repeal all laws exempting church property from taxation in this state. If the calling of such a convention should meet the approval of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in Illinois, let them express their wishes and views in the matter by corresponding with me, and provided there is a response favoring such a meeting, I will in my official capacity, as secretary of the State League and Sub. Committee man of the Secular Union for Illinois, call a convention at such time as may seem most likely to assure its success. Let all friends address either Mr. W. S. Bell or myself at 302 State street, Chicago, Ill.

I hope to see a largely increased activity in the Liberal movement under the new name of the "Secular Union," and a generous contribution of funds to its treasury, so that there may be sufficient means to help all of the Liberal lecturers —the old war-horses, who hav given their services for years to the cause, as well as the more recent acquisitions to our ranks. I remain yours, for U. M. L., F. F. FOLLET,

Chairman Sub. Com. Secular Union of Illinois.

ELMO, ARK., Nov. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I am receiving my TRUTH SEEKER all O. K., and expect to receive it, or some paper of its sentiments, as long as I liv. And, sir, I beg to say this through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that I will pay the subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER two years to any person who will reproduce the calculation determining the sun to be 93,000,000 miles from the earth: and, further, that I will pay the same price to any person who will by geometrical calculation prove that the sun is over 12,000 miles from the earth. This offer to stand good for three months from date. If agreeable to all parties, reply through THE TRUTH SEEKER. I claim that it can be proven by geometrical calculation that the sun is not over 12,000 miles from the earth. My address is Elmo, Ark.

JOHN HINDMAN, Surveyor and Civil Engineer.

NEWPORT, ME, Nov. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: For the life of me I cannot see why "N. G. W." should write that criticism on that very important communication of "Laokoon" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 31st. And right here I want to say that any person who can furnish such a grand paper as that ought to be proud to giv their name. What better comparison of the hypocritical work of the Christian prohibitionists than the deception practiced with the Trojan horse? No more important statement can be made than the closing one of "Laokoon," viz.: "The Prohibition movement, and all other temperance efforts, may clip off the outer branches of the upas-tree of drunkenness, but they do not giv one deadly blow at the roots."

No person livs or ever will liv that can prove that statement false. Except the curse of the Christian religion, Maine never had a greater curse than the Prohibitionists, first working with the "Maine law," and now with the God-in-the-Constitution Prohibitionists. And when such fanatics as Neal Dow say that law has lessened the sale of liquor in Maine, they say that which is false. The only real, good temperance work ever done in Maine, or anywhere else, was the moral suasion, Washingtonian movement, many years ago. There was no Christian fanaticism with the Washingtonians, nor was there any "come to Jesus," as there is now in all the so-called temperance meetings.

No Liberalist can go into a temperance meeting anywhere now without being disgusted with their talk. Much of the time is spent in disgusting prayers, and the senseless talk about trusting in God and Jesus to keep you from getting drunk. One man said in a temperance-come-to-Jesus meeting, "I never could keep out of a dram-shop if it was not for the help of God. Going by a saloon one day with a firm reliance on God to save me, suddenly I saw a run-away horse, when I turned into the street and was saved." Why "N. G. W." wanted to waste time and valuable space in criticising one of the most important papers ever printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER is amazing to me. Whoever aids the Prohibitionists helps the God-in-the-Constitution party.

SEWARD MITCHELL.

TORONTO, CAN., Nov. 25, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I notice that our celebrated orthodox preachers are formulating questions for Christians to put to Atheists. What is the meaning of this? Is it that common sense is becoming popular, and that their luxurious living is in danger, that they are building a breastwork behind which to hide their dupes for a few more years? Canon Farrar has instructed the Christians to put the following questions to Atheists: 1. What did matter come from? 2. Where did motion come from? 3. Where did life come from? 4. Whence came this exquisit order and design in nature? If one told you that millions of printers' types should fortuitously shape themselvs into the "Divine Comedy" of Dante or the plays of Shakspere, would you not think him a madman? 5. Whence came consciousness? 6. Who gave man free will? 7 and last. Whence came conscience? These questions can be as properly put to Christians as to Atheists, but if you wish a reasonable reply, a reply within the bounds of probability, certainly ask the Atheist. 1. What did matter come from. We might answer, if we thought the one asking the question could appreciate a reasonable answer, that it came from the boils of Joshua at the time God commanded the sun to stand still to convince Joshua that he would not die; or from the boils of the much-afflicted Job. We know that matter is indestructible. We can change the form, that is all, and we see a universe of matter before us. Then, which is the more reasonable supposition, that the matter of which the universe is made did and always will exist, or that it was spoken into existence by some being whom it is death to look in the face—but you may get into the crevice of a rock and see his hinder parts? We hav in the Bible a description of the great, only, and eternal God, and it always seemed to me that he was just a big, powerful savage, with not sufficient sense to build a barn, let alone being the creator and manager of a universe that is proved by his own supposed revelations that he knew nothing of.

Can a dead thing create itself? I suppose what is meant by this question is, can inanimate matter produce life? In all probability this is closely connected with the second question, Where did motion come from? Motion is a property of matter, and matter is eternal. You dig iron ore from the earth; you say this is motionless, or dead matter; you convert the ore into a bar of railroad iron; in laying the track they know enough to make allowance for expansion. What makes it expand? You say heat. You fill a bucket with water and freeze the same, what bursts the bucket? Expansion of water by cold! It is a good general rule that heat expands and cold contracts, but it is a rule with exceptions, showing that the atoms of which different materials are composed are in constant motion, and are differently influenced by cold and heat. While cold agitates the particles of one substance to greater activity and produces expansion, heat does the same thing for the other, proving that motion and matter are inseparable.

"Whence came the exquisit order and design in nature?"

Now comes a supposition which is really silly and misleading. If one told you that millions of printers' type should place themselvs into poetry, you would certainly consider that he would be well qualified to write a bible. The art of printing is something entirely foreign to any ideas that ever agitated the intellect of Jehovah. The inspiratioon of Shakspere came from a grand knowledge of the experiences of humanity, so that none who read can doubt but what he has written is truth. If as much could be said of the revelations of your barbarian God, then might we hav some little faith that he had sufficient sense to design and keep in repair the worlds he never dreamed of.

"Whence came consciousness?" Consciousness is the result of material action and life. Can you get any opinions or ideas from a dead man? Common sense says you can't; but Christians pray for help and pardon from a man who has been dead well on to two thousand years. When I hear of the great things Jesus is doing for people, I feel like saying, as Mark Twain did when shown the Egyptian mummy. "Is he dead? Yes, dead four thousand years. Well, now, if you hav a good, fresh corpse, trot him out."

"Who gave you free will?" The same power in nature, and the same experience that teaches one that there is always a certain amount of dampness when it rains, and to come in out of the wet. That there is always more or less heat in fire, and the experience of all animals, except it might be man sometimes, teaches them to avoid whatever givs them pain or discomfort; and if they can ever become so refined that they will suffer pain rather than inflict it upon others, they become the superior of the Christian God—they become a man or woman.

"Whence comes conscience?" Conscience is the result of education. If one has a respectable parentage, good association, the chances are they will be about right, so that it will not be necessary to be born the second time. Nothing like being born right the first time. A father, in this city, was in the habit of sending his two little sons out through the day and evening to steal anything that was not too hot nor heavy to carry away. If they did not meet with good success, he would beat them and send them to bed supperless. These boys would, no doubt, hav a terrible pricking of conscience if they did not succeed in bringing enough stolen property home to satisfy their father. Then whence comes the consciences of educated and intelligent priests who preach piety and practice the reverse? A man who can pull the wool over the eyes of ignorance, and make long prayers about something he can positivly know nothing of, and knows that he is a deceiver, is in a grand school to make them as they are, and shown by statistics to be, the most vicious class of men.

As Mr. Ingersoll said, in his lecture at Albany, "Giv me the opinions of a scientist, a man who would travel around the world for a new fact, and would not lie about the meanest bug that crawls," in preference to priests who for money tell their deluded dupes about an unknown God whom they ignorantly worship.

WM. CHURCHILL.

CLAYVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I feel deeply grateful to you for your faithfulness to me in sending me the invincible old TRUTH SEEKER so long after the expiration of my term of subscription. Sir, I cannot receive your paper without rendering you a just compensation. The God within will not allow it.

"If the god within says well done,
What are other gods to me?
Hell is his frown, and where his smile is.
There is heaven for the free."

Inclosed find one dollar. I will send you more as soon as I can get it. When I feel unable to pay you I will say so, then you will know what to depend on. You and I are infinitesimal portions of the sum total, or infinit whole. Out of the eternity of the past we came forth. We now stand in the eternity of the present, and, as natural law makes no retrograde movements, we shall go on evoluting throughout the eternity of the future. One set of circumstances with us will continue until their mission is completed, when they will gradually expire, and, from their ashes, a new order of things will be born into existence. And so the great law of progress will ever continue to go on, composing and decomposing, laying off old forms and taking on new. And every new form taken on will be one peg higher in the scale of development than its preceding one, and so we shall ever increase in knowledge, wisdom, and goodness—in knowledge pertaining to the great fundamental law, governing and controling the originating forces of the universe, while we ascend the emerald-crowned mountains of progress forever.

J. P. SMITH, Spiritualist.

OSHKOSH, WIS., Nov. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith send you a couple of Oshkosh papers with some items marked to draw your attention. We hav had what they call a lot of revival meetings here of late, and as the papers said so much about the singing of Mr. and Mrs. Chubbuck, I thought I would go one evening and take in the show. Well, one evening last week I took my wife with me and got a seat pretty well in front, as I am a little hard of hearing. As near as I could learn, this was a sort of a combination of four or five different churches, and some five or six preachers were on the stage, for this first M. E. church was formerly a theater, but was too small, and on that account was sold to the church. I should say it will hold about five hundred people, but with all their zeal it was not more than half full.

Well, Mr. Chubbuck and wife gave us some singing that was a x between opera and church music (and, by the way, he would be a very good singer if he did not try to exaggerate so much). Then he gave us a short exhortation, but not one new idea, and before he dismissed us he gave all who could do so an invitation to remain to an experience meeting, which he said would immediately follow, and wishing to see the whole play, we staid, and I must say that the after-piece was far the best, for in it he told all those who wished to be prayed for to stand up, but your humble servant and several others kept their seats; seeing this, Mr. Chubbuck came up the aisle behind me, and putting his hand on my shoulder, he asked me "if I knew God." I told him "No, and I did not believe any one else did; that I had only come here to look on and see the play, and that I had got over all such foolishness long years ago;" then he left me and went on to the front. Now I think he ought to hav made a greater effort to save so great a sinner. I do not know of their converting anyone that night, and it was a good night too. I receive my TRUTH SEEKER regularly and should be very lonesome without it.

GEO. M. HARE.

SOUTH OTSELIC, Nov. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: About three weeks since I visited your city on business, and having recently lost a very dear relativ, I felt that possibly an opportunity awaited me of receiving some message from her, on account of my being in a city of mediums. Accordingly, after seeing the advertisment of Mr. and Mrs. Caffray, I repaired to their residence one morning about 10 o'clock, and was met at the door by a gentleman of medium hight, rather light complexioned, with brown eyes, and rather a haughty, striking appearance generally. I asked if I could see Mrs. Caffray. The gentleman asked if I wished to see her upon business. I replied I did, whereupon he invited me into the front hall, and called Mrs. Caffray from the front parlor to see me. A short and very fresh lady, of, I should judge, not over twenty-one or two years, answered to the call. I informed her I had called to ascertain something of her mediumship, charges, etc. She replied she was the materializing medium; that her husband was the slate-writing medium, and that she would not giv a seance short of $10.00, and that a sitting for slate-writing would be $3.00. She inquired if I had ever seen anything of the phenomena. I replied I had. I had attended materializing seances at Moravia, with Mrs. Andrews as medium; and I might hav added I had received manifestations from Slade, Porter, and several others, and had been acquainted with Spiritualism for twenty years. I told her I would take a slate-writing, whereas she spoke to Mr. Caffray upon the subject, he making reply that he could not giv a sitting till between 12 and 1 o'clock. Mrs. Caffray remarked that Mr. Caffray did not like to giv sittings in the forenoon, as he hardly ever got any writing. She explained how the writing is done; that Mr. Caffray washed two slates clean, then placing a pencil between them, and then, himself holding them under a table, all the time in plain sight of me, received the writing. I bade her good-bye, to return to my hotel and wait till 1 o'clock. Upon my journey, of several blocks, the thought arose in my mind that I would purchase and prepare a couple of slates of my own. Consequently I bought two slates, lock and hinges; took them to my room, adjusted the hinges and lock so that the space between them would just admit of a pencil the size of a grain of wheat. After thoroughly cleaning the slates and locking them with the pencil inside, I started again, full of hope, for the Caffray residence, ariving there at the appointed hour. My ring being answered by Mrs. Caffray, she invited me into the front parlor, where Mr. Caffray was seated practicing upon his cornet. I took a seat at the opposit side of the room from him. He seemed so charmed with the melody of his instrument as not to be aware of my presence. After waiting in silence a few moments for a pause in Mr. Caffray's brilliant performance, Mrs. Caffray cautiously broke upon his reverie by announcing to him that "the lady was there to see him," after which he looked up, laid aside his cornet, and, saying he did not know whether I would get anything or not, proceeded to assist his wife to set a square-topped stand out in the room, covered with felt cloth, and thoroughly curtained to the floor on all sides with the same. Then both retired through a curtained doorway to the next room. Upon their return after a few minutes I said to Mr. Caffray that if it did not matter to him, we would use my slates, as I had some with me. He inquired if my slates had been magnetized. I replied they had not, and proceded to undo them. As I showed them to him he remarked that they "had brass on them, that he could not use slates that had not been magnetized, and had brass on them." The hinges and back were of brass. I asked if people ever brought their own slates to him, and he replied "they did, but they were not like mine." He seemed a little excited and his disposition slightly ruffled at the appearance of me and my slates. He said that "those locked slates showed an aversion to the subject at the outset." I asked him if he ever used pencil and paper. He replied that he never used anything but his own slates. I asked if he charged $3 if we did not receive anything—"$3 just the same whether you get anything or not." After the conversation, of which I hav just given a verbatim account, Mr. Caffrey seated himself and resumed his practice upon his cornet, leaving me to my own contemplations. As I was deliberating whether to allow him to use his own slates, pay my $3.00, and run the risk of getting anything, Mr. Caffray ceased his melody and inquired of his wife when his music-teacher was coming. After receiving her reply that he came at three, he arose, took his hat, and proceeded toward the door, when Mrs. Caffray inquired of him if he were going out, and received his reply that he was, and that if his teacher called before his return to tell him "he would soon be in." He walked out without any further remarks, leaving me to bring my call to a close as soon as possible; which I did without comment, but feeling very much disappointed, and with strong doubts as to the genuinness of the Caffray mediumship, also a conviction that Mr. Caffray was anything but a gentleman.

A SUBSCRIBER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Potatoes and Prayer.

The following poem administers a severe though just rebuke to wordy Christianity. It is a fragment of a charity sermon preached many years ago by an eccentric minister who thought more of works than prayers. The poetry is rather homely, but the moral it conveys is instructiv.—Investigator.

[If a brother or a sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; no withstanding ye giv them not those things which are needful for the body; what doth it profit?—James ii, 13, 16.]

An old lady sat in her old arm-chair,
With wrinkled visage, disheveled hair,
And hunger-worn features;
For days and for weeks her only fare,
As she sat there in her old arm-chair,
Had been potatoes.

But now they were gone; of bad or good
Not one was left for the old lady's food,
Of those potatoes;
And she sighed and said, "What shall I do?
Where shall I send, and to whom shall I go
For more potatoes?"

And she thought of the deacon over the way,
The deacon so ready to worship and pray,
Whose cellar was full of potatoes;
And she said, "I will send for the deacon to come;
He'll not mind much to giv me some
Of such a store of potatoes."

And the deacon came over as fast as he could,
Thinking to do the old lady some good,
But never once thought of potatoes;
He asked her at once what was her chief want?
And she, simple soul, expecting a grant,
Immediately answered, "Potatoes."

But the deacon's religion didn't lie that way,
He was more accustomed to preach and pray
Than to giv of his hoarded potatoes;
So, not hearing of course, what the old lady said,
He rose to pray with uncovered head,
But she only thought of potatoes.

He prayed for patience, wisdom, and grace,
But when he prayed, "Lord giv her peace,"
She audibly sighed, "Giv potatoes!"
And at the end of each prayer which he said,
He heard, or thought he heard in its stead,
The same request for potatoes.

The deacon was troubled, knew not what to do,
'Twas very embarrassing to hav her act so
About those "tarnal potatoes!"
So ending his prayer, he started for home;
But, as the door closed behind him, he heard a deep groan,
Oh! giv to the hungry, potatoes.

And that groan followed him all the way home,
In the midst of the night it haunted his room—
"Oh! giv to the hungry, potatoes;"
He could bear it no longer, arose and dressed;
From his well-filled cellar, taking in haste,
A bag of his best potatoes.

Again he went to the widow's lone hut,
Her sleepless eyes had not yet shut;
But there she sat in that old arm-chair,
With the same wan features, the same sad air,
And, entering in, he poured on the floor
A bushel or more from his goodly store,
Of choicest potatoes.

The widow's heart leaped up for joy,
Her face was haggard and wan no more.
"Now," said the deacon, "shall we pray?"
"Yes," said the widow, "now you may."
And he knelt himself down on the sandy floor,
Where he had poured his goodly store;
And such a prayer the deacon prayed,
As never before his lips essayed;
No longer embarrassed, but free and full,
He poured out the voice of a liberal soul,
And the widow responded aloud "Amen!"
But said no more of potatoes.

And would you, who hear this simple tale,
Pray for the poor, and praying "prevail,"
Then preface your prayers with alms and good deeds;
Search out the poor, their wants and their needs;
Pray for peace, and grace, and spiritual food,
For wisdom and guidance, for all these are good,
But don't forget the potatoes!

Acquaintance with Nature.

One can never be without conpanions, and very interesting ones at that, who has an acquaintance with natural objects. The great chain of life presents a never-ending variety of subjects to interest, amuse, and instruct the intelligent observer. I wish every boy and girl in this world possessed a microscope. I wish I owned one myself, for the pleasure and instruction to be derived from the use of one is beyond description.

J. R. Perry writes: "I attended a picnic last summer, and, with a large microscope, I spent much time viewing various specimens of life too fine for the eye to discover, and, of all things to be wondered at, are those which elude ordiuary vision. I found specimens of inseets in full vigor of life that had no organic eye, or lens structure, at all, but which depended on feeling their way, and the protruding arms were about fourteen hundred times the length of their bodies. If this is not a disproportion in the process of evolution I should like to know what to call it. An insect with legs a thousand times as long as his body! Others with a double-jointed head, the outer one all eye, a strong parabolic eye lens, so that his whole body must hav been a retina to accommodate the reflection of so gigantic an eye. Here were Mr. and Mrs. No-Eyes in company with Mr. and Mrs. All-Eyes! How, or in what manner of way, must they hav been performing to find out each other as neighbors, and pry into each other's business? And to think that each developed from a germ which a twenty-five hundred diameter power could scarcely discover, is a still greater mystery. And may not this train of reasoning on facts bring us to the inevitable conclusion that away down in the arcana of nature all is life?"

I hav been sometimes asked, "How shall we lead the young away from the whirlpool of dissipation, and teach them to shun and despise depravity and vice?"

One way to do that is to show them a better way, a more pleasurable and enjoyable path. Let them know the delight there is to be found in an intimate acquaintance with the activ, industrious forces of insect and plant life. Show them the million story-books of nature, and teach them how to read their pages, illuminated with forms of glowing life and beauty. Teach them the wholesome facts, the sweet poetry of life and duty as revealed in earth, air, and sky. Show them the teeming, swarming life above, below, and around, ever inviting acquaintance and friendship. Above all and with all should there be self-knowledge—a deep, far-reaching understanding of self-hood, boyhood, girlhood. They who know themselvs, and hav interest in the myriad schools of nature, who are able to read at sight the "books in the running brooks," the "sermons in stones," the poems in the daisies and the grasses, the history in the bee, the butterfly, the bird and the worm, and in all the forms of creeping, floating life, will find no time for dissipation, for idle hours or sinful excesses.

S. H. W.

The Letter.

Her sweet fair face was flushing
Like a blushing pink-white rose,
As the merciless jests and laughter
Higher and louder rose.

For some one had found a letter,
Written by this sweet child;
It was, so they said, a love-letter,
And their laughter grew still more wild.

The sweet lips were half aquiver,
But the pretty face trying to frown,
Half-pleading, half-frightened, half-angry—
I longed to knock them down.

I had hoped—but that is over—
I had longed to stand by her side
And shield this tender blossom
From all that might betide

But it angered me beyond measure
To see this thoughtless crowd
At what is most sacred and tender
Jesting, with voices loud;

To drag out the sweetest, and truest,
And tenderest heart on earth,
And make its most sacred feeling
The subject of jests and mirth.

But I snatched the letter from them,
And 'twas my pleasure and pain
To restore the dainty missiv
To the child I had loved in vain.

Irwin, Ia. REKAB ESIUOL H.

Origin of the Fork.

Forks made their appearance about the tenth century. We find mention that a certain Father Galveston, a favorit of Edward II., had sixty-nine silver spoons and three forks. But, it is added, these three forks were intended solely for the eating of pears.

Queen Clemence, of Hungary, in 1328, was the possessor of thirteen spoons and one fork, and Queen Anne, of Bourbon, had one of gold which was inherited by Charles V., king of France This king himself owned seven or eight, according to an inventory made in 1380. The one left him by will he subsequently had ornamented with precious stones.

The silver ware of Chancellor Duprat, which an expert declared to be worth £33,848—a considerable amount in those days (1536)—included only one fork, while it contained two dozen spoons.

The inventory of the possessions of the Prince of Conde (1588) records but one fork. It is described as silver, coated with gold, and was reserved exclusivly for the use of the prince.

The first inventory in which a number of forks are mentioned is that of Gabrielle d'Estrees (1599). It includes twenty, of which eight were made of silver, the others being of iron with coral handles. But these forks were used only for toasting bread, and Gabrielle, the prince of Conde, sovereigns, and the common people, all ate with their fingers.

It is a strange fact that the introduction of forks for table service at first provoked scandal. A curious pamphlet attacking the minions of Henry III. speaks indignantly in the following strain: "In the first place," says the anonymous letter, "they never touch meat with their fingers, but use forks, which they raise up to the mouth while stretching out the neck. They eat their salad with forks, for it is forbidden to touch meat with the fingers, no matter how difficult it may be, and they prefer touching their lips with this little instrument rather than with their fingers."

Before the introduction of the fork, there existed a sort of code of fine manners for the use of persons of culture. Among other things, it is ordained that "when something is offered at table, it is proper to take it with three fingers, and also it is considered a breach of fine manners to touch one's nose with the hand in which the meat is held."

At the present time, in certain countries the fingers constitute the only forks in use. The Turks and Arabs still adhere to this primitiv custom; in China two little sticks are employed, wherewith the favorit rice is eaten. But, in general, the fork in one shape or another is now used, and it is often not this instrument, but the tempting viand to plunge it into, which is a desideratum.

A Fable.

Once, through some transaction not necessary to mention, a man came in possession of a hyena that was extremely savage and ravenous. It had killed many persons, and, in fact, had lived for some time principally on human flesh and blood. The people were afraid of it, and it had been permitted to roam at large, devouring whatever came in its way, and doing pretty much as it pleased.

But this man had it caged and deprived of the prerogativs it had previously enjoyed, and denied it the pleasure of subsisting on human flesh. Although the hyena opposed every reform proposed by the man until it was compelled to adopt it, after many years it became domesticated, and, forgetting its past life, claimed to hav always been as harmless as a dove. The man was good and kind, and the foolish people, strange as it may seem, said: "See how the hyena has civilized the man! Note how affectionate he is! What a civilizing influence the hyena has on the man! how tender, how sympathetic, it makes him!"

That man represents the people, and the hyena, popular religion. WM. SCOTT.

Osceola Mills, Pa.

A Dog That Understands.

There is a Newfoundland dog of the historian's acquaintance, Lion by name, who gives daily proof of his comprehension of what is said to him. A lady called on his mistress the other day. During her call Lion came in rather slyly, lay down on the parlor carpet, and went to sleep. The conversation ran on, and the visitor said finally:

"What a handsome Newfoundland you hav!"

Lion opened one eye. "Yes," said his mistress, "he is a very good dog, and takes excellent care of the children."

Lion opened the other eye and waved his tail complacently to and fro along the carpet.

"When the baby goes out he always goes with her, and I feel perfectly sure then that no harm can come to her," his mistress went on.

Lion's tail thumped up and down violently on the carpet.

"And he is so gentle to them all, and such a playmate and companion to them, that we would not take a thousand dollars for him."

Lion's tail now went up and down, to and fro, and round and round with great and undisguised glee.

"But," said his mistress, "Lion has one serious fault."

Total subsidence of Lion's tail, together with the appearance of an expression of great concern on his face.

"He will come in here with his dirty feet and lie down on the carpet, when I hav told him time and again that he mustn't do it."

Here Lion arose with an air of the utmost dejection and humiliation and slunk out of the room, with his lately exuberant tail totally crestfallen.—Boston Record.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—MIXED LETTERS.

Do thirg nto sceabue ti is ocylip tub cabsuee it si itrgh; hits is retu hhypoospil.

PENN, ESQ.

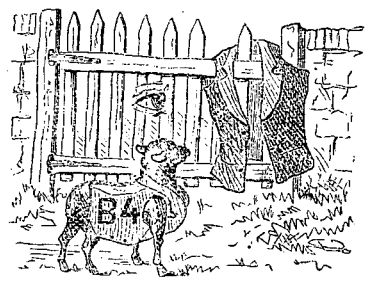
2.—ENIGMA.

I am composed of nine letters:
My 5, 4, 3, 2 is a transcript from an original.
My 6, 7, 8, 9 is a formal ceremony.
My 8, 4, 3 is a toy.
My 1, 4, 2 is a small coasting-vessel.
My 5, 6, 2, 3, 8 is a cell beneath a church for burying the dead.
My whole is a creature to be shunned by everybody.

FANNY ROGERS.

Cleveland, Ohio.

3.—DOUBLE ACROSTIC.



1. A sudden fright. 2. Uncommon. 3. Stately. 4. Trifling task. 5. An image. 6. Weary. 7. Extreme. 8. To vary. 9. Deus.

Primals. Everlasting.
Finals. Ephemerides.
Connected.

Certain prizes given for original puzzles contributed to this column.

Santa Clara, Cal. GEORGE I. DIBBLE.

4.—REBUS.

Advise to capitalists.

5.—PUZZLE.

Those who believe that "figures won't lie" may find a great moral adage concealed in the numbers above.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, NOV. 21, 1885.

1.—$2,244.65. 2.—He gained one foot each day till the last day, when he made four feet, so that the well was 6 plus 4 ft.=10 ft.

Solvers.—Geo. W. Williams, Kate Anderson.

CHAT WITH PUZZLERS.

We welcome to the Puzzle Box Fanny Rogers, Penn, Esq, George I. Dibble, and Geo. W. Williams. While we are always fond of our old friends, we are ever pleased to meet new ones.

G. W. W. writes thus: "Tell Wm. Scott to giv us some more questions in arithmetic."

Had you not better be careful, G. W. W., how you invite mathematical problems? We had one correspondent who declared our mathematical puzzles "brain-splitting." As we hav heard nothing from him of late, we fear the puzzles hav got the best of the brains. However, we think your brains can stand a good deal of hard puzzling. Mr. Scott and others will please prepare for battle.

ELLA T.—No, our puzzlers are not all little; they are pretty well grown, some of them; but, you know,

"Men are only boys grown tall—
Hearts don't change much, after all."

JOHN JONES.—You ask us: "If love is not a puzzle, what is it?" Look in the dictionary, sir, and don't ask foolish questions.—ED. C. C.

Correspondence.

LINDSAY, ONT., NOV. 14, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I read about the calendar being offered to the person who would originate a puzzle for the Children's Corner, so I thought I would try. I am 13 years old and I go to school. I read the Children's Corner and take much interest in it. I inclose a puzzle. Yours truly, GEO. M. BATESON.

[We would be pleased to hav a longer letter from George when he has leisure.—ED. C. C.]

FIDELITY, MO., NOV. 14, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, though he has not read a word for twenty years. Ma reads it and thinks it the best paper she ever read. I read the Children's Corner every time. I see that other little girls write, so I thought I would write too. I never did write a letter before. If you don't think this good enough, please don't hav it printed. I hav a curiosity in seeing one of those curious and interesting calendars, so I will send you some puzzles. I am going to school, and I think some time I can write a better letter than this one.

Yours truly, VICTORIA GRUBB.

[The above is a good letter for the first one, and Victoria will improve with practice. We shall always be pleased to hear from her. But she must send the answers to her puzzles or we cannot print them.—ED. C. C.]

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.
SECOND EDITION.
Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever.

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

St. Matthew Before the Court on a Charge of Forgery.

BY SECULARIST.

Price, 10 cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

TO APPEAR IMMEDIATELY.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT.

By the same Author.

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,

WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st fl or shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
The Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes. Twenty-five cents per copy.

Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Thirty cents each.

Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all th schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL ina LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."

ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Price, 60 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y

Bible Fabrications Refuted

and

The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. FADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popula R
Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcibl E
Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" mad A Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cure D
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and liberat I
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young me N
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interestin G

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the
Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Poetry.

The Sprites' Revel.

A PANTHEISTIC POEM.

"What time the gods kept carnival
Tricked out in star and flower,
And in camp elf and saurian forms
They swathed their too much power."
—Emerson.

A green tree stood in a lone green wood,
The leaves aglow in the golden sun,
Over the earth an emerald web,
Threaded with scarlet and gold was spun.
'Tween warp and woof and the shining sand
These words went forth through the sea and land,
"Come out, gay sprites, in the white starlight,
And dance in the golden glow of the night.

The twilight fell; to the pink of a shell
The sky toned down from crimson and gray,
Then 'mid the green leaves of the lone green tree,
A thousand lights flash and quiver and play.
And this is the way that the play began,
As from Greece came piping the old god, Pan:
"Art come, gay sprites, in the white starlight,
To dance in the golden glow of the night?"

Then there was a cry, a twitter of "Aye!"
While never a sprite returned a nay,
Strange little feet twinkled over the green,
Upon this rosy-robed night in May.
A glow-worm waltzed with a bright firefly,
A pairing and mating of low and high,
Lightly these sprites, in the bright starlight,
Waltzed under the golden glow of the night.

A star in the sky bent down from on high
And kissed into blushes a pond lily white.
On the golden sand, in the depths below,
He left her his face so charming and bright,
And whispered of secrets weird and old,
Worth more to men than alchemists' gold.
These words the sprites, in the white starlight,
Learned under the golden glow of the night.

A grasshopper spry chose a gay butterfly,
And indulged in some most wonderful poses,
Such a flinging of limbs, such a glancing of wings,
That the leaves were brushed from the roses.
Then these belles, like belles in the upper world,
With scorn for the posers their red leaves curled,
And lightly danced in the white starlight,
Danced under the golden glow of the night.

This revel then, like the revels of men,
Grew madder and madder, till from the holes
In the oaks and poplars, maples and elms,
Peeped elfin faces, once living men's souls;
When the god of love from a pink sea-shell,
Came with love-tipped arrow, the sport to quell,
Old Bacchus laughed in the white starlight,
And danced in the golden glow of the night.

The playful breeze swept through the trees
That with blushing flowers and leaves were thronging,
And the unborn buds wrapped snugly in green
Sighed softly with an infinit longing—
Sighed to be roses and lilies full blown,
As buds of humanity long to be grown.
So sighed these sprites in the white starlight,
Sighed under the golden glow of the night.

The rocks and the sand, the sea and the land,
The green earth below, the stars in the sky,
Glowed into life, with thoughts so grand
That creation drew an ecstatic sigh.
From hades and heaven, below and above,
Came these magical words, "Our god is Love!"
At his the sprites, in the white starlight,
Bent low, in the golden glow of the night.

This grand old world, to eternity hurled,
From eternity ever to roll,
Each force and atom imbued with this love,
Which is life to the sand, and life to the soul.
For the trees and the leaves, the birds and the flowers,
Are part of the life of this grand world of ours—
Even these sprites in the white starlight,
That dance in the golden glow of the night.

MRS. A. M. FREEMAN.

Home and Early Days.

How oft through the noisy street
I listless, sad, and weary roam!
A dream comes o'er me, pure and sweet—
A memory of my boyhood home!
And then I am a boy again,
Careless and full of noisy glee,
Bounding o'er valley, hill, and plain
To gather flowers or chase the bee.
My father's welcome voice I hear;
I meet my mother's tender smile;
Brothers are there, and sisters dear
With gentle mirth the hours beguile.
On old Scar-hill again I stand,
Or in the shallow river wade
With bag of chestnuts in my hand
And walnuts from the sunny glade.
And happy was the summer day
When it became my working part
To spread and rake the new-mown hay
And ride upon the rumbling cart.
The little school-house painted red,
Close by a tiny purling brook—
Once more the well-worn path I tread,
With jacket torn, and mangled book.
I see again "Old Uncle Hugh"
Boys from his fruit-trees sternly chase;
I see his homespun frock of blue,
His battered hat and kindly face.

. . . . . .

Now fades the dream; all, all are gone,
And I am here on earth alone,
Wearied and worn to struggle on
Till Death shall kindly claim his own.

GEORGE M. DAVENPORT.

A YOUNG lady asked a gentleman why he never attended a church entertainment. "It only costs ten cents to go in, you know," she added. "Yes," was the reply, "it costs only ten cents to get in, but it costs about four dollars to get out."

Expelled from Masonry.

Some months ago King Solomon's Lodge, No. 22, F. & A. M., of Toronto, Ont., expelled one of its members for holding Agnostic views. The lodge's action in the matter was sustained by the grand master of the province, who cited instances where the same position had been taken by grand lodges elsewhere, notably in New York. The expulsion was commented on quite generally by the press of the country at the time, and attracted the attention of W. C. Bryant, of North Star, a member of Ithaca Masonic Lodge, who addressed the following letter to the Toronto lodge:

"NORTH STAR, MICH., April 18, 1885.

"SECRETARY, K. S. LODGE, TORONTO, Dear Sir: I hav recently seen in the papers an account of the treatment of a Mr. Harrison at the hands of your lodge, and to say that the object of this is to express my indignation at such treatment of any man is a mild way to put it. I hav been a master Mason for fourteen years, and during ten years of that time hav held to the creed of an Agnostic, or, in other words, that there was no proof or evidence of the existence of a great Boog-a-boo, beyond the clouds, so many call a God; and I hav never been anyways mealy-mouthed about it either, and my views are well known to all the members of our lodge who hav sense enough to know that man, and not creed, is what makes a lodge and a Mason.

"Now I know nothing about Mr. Harrison, and never heard of him until I saw his name in the paper. But I do know that if every Mason who holds Agnostic or Infidel opinions should express his contempt by letter to you for the manner in which you plainly said to the world that you think difference of opinion a crime, you would be flooded with such an avalanche of letters that would make some of your intolerant members (who, no doubt, wink at such offenses as drunkenness, wife-beating, vulgar or obscene language) think that they might be much better employed than to be qurreling with members about subjects that admit of proof purely and wholly speculativ.

"Now, Mr. Secretary, I should advise you to get some light reading for your lodge—something that will tell them in plain English and small words that this earth is round, and that it is a long time since they burnt people for being heretics; also that witches are very scarce, and that ghosts hav to be hunted down by telegraph. And with proper education there may be some hope for your lodge yet.

"Yours, W. C BRYANT,
"Ithaca Lodge, No. 123, F. & A. M."

Soon after the receipt of Mr. Bryant's letter, the worshipful master of King Solomon Lodge of Toronto sent a copy of the same to the worshipful master of Ithaca lodge, when the necessary machinery was set in motion to try Mr. Bryant for the offense; it being in direct violation of the spirit of Freemasonry to allow any of its members to entertain the belief expressed in Mr. Bryant's letter, if the fact be known, as no Agnostic or Infidel can be knowingly made a Mason, nor can one retain a place in a lodge should the fact be known that he entertains such views. After a duly constituted Masonic trial, therefore, Mr. Bryant was found guilty of the charges, viz., that of being an Agnostic and also of the transmission of an insulting letter to a neighboring lodge. He was then expelled from the lodge and forever after debarred the rights and benefits of Masonry. This is the only case of the kind that ever occurred in the United States, and probably the second expulsion for this cause in the world, each of which will be looked upon as of more than passing importance to all good Masons the world over, it being a cardinal principle of the fraternity that its members must believe in a true God. Mr. Bryant's position and action is sincerely regretted, as he has an excellent record as an honorable and straightforward business man, and is socially above reproach.—Gratiot Journal, Ithaca, Mich.

Book Notices.

SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J K. Ingalls. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price, $1.50.

This volume is by one of the few living men who connect present social and labor agitations with a generation long past. He was associated with the band of veterans who in the time of Jackson's administration inaugurated the movement against the monopoly of public lands, in favor of the abolition of "imprisonment for debt," of the recognition of the rights of married women to property, the mechanic's lien law, homestead exemption, and free homesteads upon the public lands to actual settlers, etc.

But although still adhering to the fundamental thought of Spence, Evans, Douglass, etc., he has in this volume evinced a mind free from bias and has canvassed the subjects treated with vigor and clearness, and discusses with candor as well as ability the latest phases of the industrial question.

He seeks to prove that land and labor produce all social wealth. This question of the productiv factors or agents, it will be readily seen, is vital to any exact solution of the problem of "work and wealth." If they are dual, as most modern writers agree, of course then no other factor or agent can share in the equity of division. If they are tri partite, as those contend who justify the claims of capital to a share, or if they are many sided, as Mr. Macleod claims, it would then appear that labor holds by a very shadowy and uncertain tenure, and might as well submit to its conditions and make the best terms it can with the other agents in producing wealth. Whoever feels an interest in this discussion can find the dual theory plainly and forcibly stated in these pages.

In pursuing the inquiry, however, he takes up the question of land ownership and private property in land, showing that they hav arisen from changing the common ownership to a separate ownership, and that "Rent has arisen, not at all in the way which economists and writers on law represent," but "by converting the public tax formerly levied upon the land into a private claim or debt due to him who had perverted the public revenue to his private use, and then claimed dominion of the land from whence it was derived." Profits, rent, and interest are treated as "income without work," and as fraudulent, as indeed they must be if the productiv factors are only dual.

He shows, moreover, that the production of all social wealth is co-operativ, and that therefore the title to the full products of his work is the only equitable system of compensation for him who does the work of the world; and that all that is necessary to complete co-operation on the grandest scale is to apply principles of honesty in keeping the accounts of any collectiv industry or enterprise, and in the exchanges of commerce.

He givs an interesting sketch of the three schools of political economy, and of what he calls a "retrograde school"—Carey's. The rise of capitalism is also briefly but graphically stated. But what will more particularly challenge the attack of the later school of economists is the treatment of values. He divides value into three kinds: Value in utility; value in service, and value in exchange. The first of these, he claims, is invariable, the second stable, and the last alone fluctuating, but which has a given mean—the value in service. The confounding of these wholly different values as one is the error of the economists. Value of the land and of the laborer, as under chattel slavery, he shows to be forcefully imposed upon the economic balance, vitiating all transactions thereunder, not only because they are subject to no operation of the law of supply and demand, but because they are no proper subjects of traffic or exchange whatever.

As to remedies, he discards all which do not depend on a comprehension of economic and social law. He treats in a caustic manner those proposed by Carey, Kellogg, George, Clarke, and others, especially those which rely upon taxation, although acknowledging the great service these authors hav rendered in calling attention to the evils of our land, money, and trade systems, and which, he admits, they hav so ably exposed. The chapter on "Taxation as a Remedy" is quite radical, but is at least suggestiv, and calls for attention.

In place of "remedies," he makes certain "suggestions to the legislators" of what they might do, if they desire to increase the confidence of the industrious people in human government, and really desire to promote equity and justice. Among these he instances repeal of all laws of land tenure, leaving occupation the only title to land. While legal monopolies and corporations remain, the requirement is that labor shall be paid by them by an eight-hour standard; that laws for the collection of debts, or, at least, of profits, rent, and interest, which represent no service, shall be abolished; and that all questions of division calling for a social arbitration, shall be treated as if the worker were a co-partner to the extent of his proportionate contribution in the value of his labor, and in the risk to life and health, which his labors involve.

If the author has not settled to general satisfaction all these questions—which, by the way, he does not claim—he has certainly presented them with sufficient force to challenge the respectful attention of all those persons who feel interested in the questions now engaging the best thought of the social and industrial world.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM. The Present and the Future Republic of North America. By a Capitalist. New York: The Truth Seeker Company. Price, $1.50.

"Rational Communism" is a work that reflects much credit upon both publisher and author. The mechanical part is executed with precision and cleanness, making the printed page a thing of beauty, a daisy, that charms the eye of the reader every time it rests upon it. We thought when reading Kelso's "Bible Analyzed" that it was unsurpassable in typographical excellence, but "Rational Communism" equals, if indeed it does not excel it, in this respect.

The author has done his work in "good form," as no one can lay down the book after carefully reading it without indorsing in a very large degree the sentiments it voices. His aim is to lucidly expose the barbarism of civilized society and to point out methods of escape from them into a higher and better social state. The subjects discussed are not new, but the writer treats them in a very interesting and suggestiv manner, and leaves his reader swayed by a noble enthusiasm of humanity, which, by the way, is no indifferent achievement in these days of indifference. He touches and stirs the moral sentiments of man by pointing to a heaven on earth which is some day to dawn.

Those who know nothing of Communism, and all those who foam at the mouth when "Communism" is mentioned, will do themselvs a great service if they will take pains to read this new and valuable contribution to Liberal literature. W. S. BELL.

302 State st., Chicago, Ill.

A NEW BOOK!
By Andrew Jackson Davis, entitled
Beyond the Valley
a sequel to the
MAGIC STAFF
An Autobiography of Andrew Jackson Davis.
Six Illustrations Picturing what Mr. Davis says he has seen.

"Beyond the Valley" is a record of events and scenes in his private and public career, beginning where the Magic Staff ends, and bringing his psychological and private experiences truthfully up to the present day. This attractive volume will interest thousands who hav never read his preceding works. It will answer the ever-recurring questions concerning remarkable events in Mr. Davis's private life, and fully explains his various public labors for mankind.

"Beyond the Valley" is a companion volume to the "Magic Staff," and resembles it in style of workmanship—in paper, press-work, binding, etc. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

For Sale by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00

WHY DON'T HE LEND A HAND
AND OTHER POEMS.
By S. P. PUTNAM, Author of Ingersoll and Jesus, Prometheus, Golden Throne, Waifs and Wanderings, Problems of the Universe, etc.

CONTENTS: Why Don't He Lend a Hand? The Golden Age, The Ideal and the Real, Not Dead but Living, Fruition, Hope, Thomas Paine, Nature's Gospel, Address to Deity, Giv us Light (Holdreth's poem often recited by Charles Watts).

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA.
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations, 290 Pages.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place. New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents. 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.
Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.
BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place. New York

SABBATH-BREAKING.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

AUTHOR OF "LIFE OF PAINE," "FALSE CLAIMS," "BIBLE MORALS," ETC.

This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view.

LARGE AND HANDSOME PRINT.

The question is discussed under the following heads:

Origin of the Sabbatic Idea—The Jewish Sabbath—The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath—Examination of Sunday Arguments—Origin of Christian Sabbath—Testimony of the Christian Fathers—The Sabbath during the Middle Ages—The Puritan Sabbath—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines—Abrogation of Sunday Laws.

Price, 25 Cents; Six Copies, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

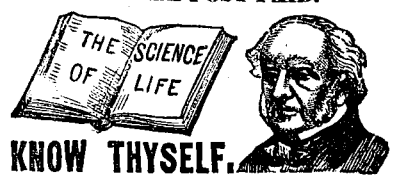
BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00



Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
POPULAR JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Headquarters for Fine Goods in the line of Genuin Diamonds; Fine Gold and Silver Watches; Chains; Bracelets; Wedding and Presentation Rings; Jewelry of Latest style; Gold Pens; Silverware; Optical and Fancy Goods; 3 ounce Coin Silver Elgin Watch, $10; 4 ounce, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Pat. Regulator stem Wind, $22; this same, fine movement, in best gold filled case, $35; with cheap movement, $25. Ladies' Solid Gold Elgin stem wind watches, $20, $24, and $32—14 karat, upward. Watches cleaned, finest work in the world, $1. Springs, $1, and returned per. reg. mail or ex., paid one way. Work for the trade at reduced rates and agents sending work once a week from every state in the Union are making lots of money. Best spectacles in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back on demand. Try me! OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Patentee of Wettstein's New Freethought Badge. The most beautiful badge ever placed upon the market. Immense sale. Elegant present for Lady or Gent. Solid gold, $3; $3.50; extra heavy, $4; with diamond, artistically enameled, $10.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.
BY MAIL POST-PAID.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut,

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 HEAL THYSELF is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y8

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N. Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Gems of Thought.

IN inflicting torture and taking life for opinion's sake Christians hav far exceeded the believers in all other religions.—D. M. Bennett.

IN the whole course of Biblical history Reimarus had not only failed to discover traces of the divine, but had found, on the other hand, much of what is human in the worst sense: the patriarchs he pronounced worldly, selfish, and crafty men; Moses an ambitious personage, unscrupulous enough to procure the enactment of an indifferent code by deceit and crime; and David—the man after God's own heart—a cruel, voluptuous, and hypocritical despot. . . . The axioms of the Christian system are false and full of contradictions, entirely opposed to all rational religious ideas and decidedly unfavorable to the moral improvement of our race.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

"I CALL a complete and generous education that which fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and war." This is the true Milton. When he offers, in another page of the "Tractate," as equivalent, a definition of the true end of learning, "To repair the ruin of our first parents by regaining to know God aright," we hav the theological Milton and what he took on from the current language of his age.—Pattison's Milton.

THERE is many a horse that is better fit for immortality than the man tha rules it. There is many a dog that has more disinterested love than the man that owns it. And why should not they hav a chance hereafter? I don't know but they will.—Henry Ward Beecher.

UP to the end of last century physical science was regarded rather as an amusement of dilettanteism than as an occupation for serious men. Of astronomy we were taught the general results. We knew, in words, that the earth was round; that it traveled round the sun as one of its planets; and that the solar system was perhaps but one of an infinit number of such systems. But the knowledge had not penetrated beyond our memories. For practical purposes, we still believed that our own earth was the most important part of the universe and man the central object for which all else had been made.—Froude's Science and Theology.

IN thae old times, they thought the moon,
Just like a sark or pair o' shoon,
Wore by degrees, till her last roon
Gaed past their viewing,
And shortly after she was done,
They gat a new one.

This passed for certain—undisputed;
It ne'er cam i' their heads to deubt it,
Till chiels gat up, and wad confute it,
And ca'd it wrang;
And muckle din there was about it,
Baith loud and lang.

—Burns's Epistle to William Simpson.

ABOVE all, I must hav a definit and distinct conception of him in whom I am to believe, whom I am to imitate as an exemplar of moral excellence. A being of which I can only catch fitful glimpses, which remains obscure to me in essential respects, may, it is true, interest me as a problem for scientific investigation, but it must remain ineffectual as regards practical influence on my life. But a being with distinct features, capable of affording a distinct conception, is only to be found in the Christ of faith, of legend, and there, of course, only by the votary who is willing to take into the bargain all the impossibilities, all the contradictions, contained in the picture. The Jesus of history, of science, is only a problem; but a problem cannot be an object of worship, or a pattern by which to shape our lives.—The Old Faith and the New, by D. F. Strauss.

THAT which is past is gone and irrevocable, and wise men hav enough to do with things present and to come; therefore they but trifle with themselvs that labor in past matters. There is no man doth a wrong for the wrong's sake, but thereby to purchase himself profit, or pleasure, or honor, or the like; therefore why should I be angry with a man for loving himself better than me? And if any man should do wrong merely out of ill-nature, why it is but yet like the thorn and br er which prick and scratch, because they can do no other.—Bacon's Essays.

LOOKING at it historically, as an outward event, the resurrection of Jesus had not the very slightest foundation. Rarely has an incredible fact been worse attested or one so ill attested been more incredible in itself. . . . Taken historically, i. e., comparing the immense effect of this belief with its absolute baselessness, the story of the resurrection of Jesus can only be called a world-wide deception. It may be humiliating to human pride, but nevertheless the fact remains: Jesus might still hav taught and embodied in his life all that is true and good, as well as what is one-sided and harsh—the latter, after all, always producing the strongest impression on the masses—nevertheless, his teachings would hav been blown away and scattered like solitary leaves by the wind had these leaves not been held together and thus preserved, as if with a stout, tangible binding, by an illusory belief in his resurrection.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

MILTON was not the slave of a name. He cared not for the word "Republic" so it was well with the commonwealth. Parliaments or single rulers he knew are but means to an end; if that end was obtained, no matter if the constitutional guarantees exist or not. Many of Milton's pamphlets are certainly party pleadings, choleric, one-sided, personal. But through them all runs the one redeeming characteristic—that they are all written on the side of liberty. He defended religious liberty against the prelates, civil liberty against the crown, the liberty of the press against the executiv, liberty of conscience against the Presbyterians, and domestic liberty against the tyranny of canon law. Milton's pamphlets might hav been stamped with the motto which Saladin inscribed (in Greek) in all his books "Liberty before everything."—Mark Pattison's Milton.

JESUS began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. —Luke xii, 1, 2.

To the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York:

The Constitution of our State guarantees that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind." The general principle of American Government is equality of all men before the law. This, as Your Honorable Body is aware, involves the principle, already acknowledged in theory, of the Total Separation of Church and State. But Church and State are now practically united by the following statutes:

1. The law exempting Church Property from Taxation.

2. The laws appropriating Money from the Public Treasury for the support of Institutions founded and managed chiefly by Sectarian Denominations.

3. The law compelling the Observance of Sunday as a religious holy day.

The undersigned, Citizens of the State of New York, do therefore respectfully but earnestly petition Your Honorable Body to repeal all the laws or parts of laws of this State which are violations of the above principles. Our reasons for asking this are:

1. The Churches are voluntary associations properly to be supported by the voluntary contributions of their members. 2. The State is compulsory. Every citizen must pay taxes. And we submit that it is unjust to a large and growing body of voters to be compelled to pay for the support of Churches which they cannot conscientiously attend; for the hire of Ministers in our Legislature and Public Institutions, in whose doctrines they are unable to believe; and to observe as holy a day to them no more sacred than any other. We also submit that the exemption of Churches from taxation, the appropriation of money for the hire of Ministers and the support of Sectarian Institutions, and the Legal observance of Sunday as a holy day, are discriminations in favor of one form of religion, are abridgments of the free exercise of religious preferences, and are therefore unconstitutional.

NAMES. | RESIDENCE.

THE

Truth Seeker Annual

— AND —

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1885.

(E. M. 285.)

With Thirty-seven Portraits of Prominent American Freethinkers, and Numerous Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1885,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1884,	17
The National Liberal League,	28
The D. M. Bennett Memorial,	41
Inspiration. By Col. Robert G. Ingersoll,	45
Materialism, alias Atheism. By the Hon. Elizur Wright,	50
Liberalism: What to Do and How to Do It. By Charles Watts,	55
A Dream of Earth and Man. By Courtlandt Palmer,	62
An English General Election Fifty Years Ago. By Thomas Mead,	65
The Demands of Liberalism. By W. S. Bush, Esq.,	69
The New Apostolic Succession. By T. B. Wakeman, Esq.,	73
Universal Mental Liberty. The Freethinkers' Creed. By Horace Seaver,	86
The Relation of Childhood to Freethought. By Susan H. Wixon,	89
The New Civilization. By Stephen Pearl Andrews,	91
The Moral Sphere of Liberalism. By Samuel P. Putnam,	98
Are We All Infants? By George Macdonald,	101
Maytime in Midwinter. By A. C. Swinburne (Selected),	105
Soul Hunger. By Elliott Preston,	107
Liberalism. By Dr. J. L. York,	111
A Difficulty and its Remedy. By C. B. Reynolds,	115
1884: Its Story in England. By Charles Bradlaugh,	119

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

33 CLINTON PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

PORTRAITS.

Thomas Paine,	G. H. Walser,	J. E. Remsburg,	Luther Colby,
R. G. Ingersoll,	John Peck,	Courtlandt Palmer,	J. P. Mendum,
D. M. Bennett,	J. H. Burnham,	Lucy Colman,	J. L. York,
T. C. Leland,	J. R. Monroe,	John R. Kelso,	Chas. P. Somerby,
T. B. Wakeman,	H. L. Green,	Elmina D. Slenker,	E. M. Macdonald,
Elizur Wright,	Chas. B. Reynolds,	Amy Post,	Juliet H. Severance,
James Parton,	Chas. Watts,	Helen H. Gardener,	Susan H. Wixon,
Parker Pillsbury,	W. S. Bell,	Mattie Krekel,	Wm. Denton,
S. P Andrews,	S. P. Putnam,	Horace Seaver,	Mrs. H. S. Lake.
W. F. Jamieson,	Elizabeth Cady Stanton,	J. D. Shaw,

TRAVELS IN FAITH,
From Tradition to Reason.
BY ROBERT C. ADAMS.
Cloth, $1.25. For Sale at this Office.

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By Robert C. Adams.
Paper, 25 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Odds and Ends.

"YES," said old Mrs. Badger, "I hav met Colonel Ingersoll, and I thought he was a very pleasant gentleman; but I hav heard that he is a regular amethyst."

WIFE: "I must get the children some linsey woolsey for winter wear." Husband: "What—that blue-looking stuff?" Wife: "Yes." Husband: "Say, if you call the blue-looking stuff linsey woolsey, you'd call the red-looking stuff Cardinal Wolsey—wouldn't you?"

WHAT'S in a name? Deacon Scriptures is one of the officials of Parson Downs's Boston church. The parson announced a collection at the very beginning of the service. Deacon Scriptures took up the collection. Only fifteen dollars resulted, but Downs got back his hat. He should search the Scriptures.

PARSON GRIDLEY, of Waco, is very much opposed to dancing. He said recently to a young lady of the congregation: "Are you one of those giddy girls to whom dancing is a heavenly pastime?" "No, I don't think dancing is perfectly heavenly." "Ah, that's right." "Dancing is not perfectly heavenly," continued the young lady, "for, you see, it comes to an end too soon; but it is very much like heaven as long as it lasts."

IN England it is the bishops that examin candidates for orders; and some bishops hav been very lax in their requirements. "I would advise you, sir," said one English diocesan within living memory, "not to write your own sermons—for some time to come, at least." "I am afraid," said another to a candidate who had failed in the sermon, "I cannot pass you. If you can't write a sermon, how could you do at all?" "Oh! my Lord, I should preach extempore." "Ah! well, then, I'll pass you."

AN ECONOMICAL DEFECT.

"I had an agent once," said a lecturer to the San Francisco Chronicle, "who was the best fellow in his business in the world. He saved me more money in advertising, and got me more notices in the newspapers than I could account for."

"What was his particular virtue?"

"He stuttered."

"One would imagin that would be a very serious objection."

"Quite the reverse. At least I didn't object, but other people did. He stuttered very badly. He would go into a newspaper office with an advertisment:

"'H—h——how m—m—m—uch f—f—for th—a—t ad?'

"'Ten dollars.' Then he began to stutter very badly.

"'I th—th—th—in—k you'd b—b—b—et—t—t—er——'

"'Geewhillikins! make it five dollars.'

"'P—p—ut it in.'

"If they'd only waited, he meant to tell them to put it in at ten dollars."

SUNDAY night, relates the Jacksonville, Fla., Times-Union, the exercises in the Congregational church had proceeded decorously enough until the choir had reached the last line of the second verse of the first hymn. Just as they struck that every light in the church went out, and the notes of the singers and the strident tones of the organ vanished into the darkness. A few moments sufficed to relight the gas, and the good dominie, with his mouth muffled by his hand to hide an audible smile, said: "The choir will please sing the closing verse of the hymn," and they at once began,

"Come, light serene! and still
Our inmost bosoms fill,
Dwell in each breast."

The soprano sang a queer compound of snicker and psalm as her eyes caught the words, and the whole audience was on the broad grin to the close of the verse, which was given in good style. It seems that a young miscreant had stolen into the basement and turned the gas off just when he imagined it would make a sensation. He was nabbed as he tried to slip out by two young men, who took him part of the way to the lockup, and, not finding a policeman, let him go for the time being. He will, nevertheless, get his deserts at the proper time.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 50. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, December 12, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

GRAB BAGS at charity fairs are prohibited in Washington by the police.

CARDINALS Manning and Howard hav written to the pope in favor of canonizing Joan of Arc.

MAINE paid $53,950 of internal revenue last year. There are 1,014 retail liquor dealers in the state.

LIZZIE MCGRATH, aged twenty-five years, of Jersey City, fell dead on the street last Sunday evening, while on her way to church.

HALF the world (the Christians) are praying for immortality; the other half (the Buddhists) are praying to be freed from its yoke.

IN one of the many Bibles scattered about a hotel in Grand Rapids for the use of its guests, a matter-of-fact drummer wrote in large letters on the title page an appeal for "fewer Bibles and better beds."

THERE is trouble in a Catholic church at Detroit, Mich. One day last week some of the women of the congregation tried to eject the priests from the pulpit, and succeeded in disrobing one.

La Tronada, a weekly Spanish anticlerical journal published at Barcelona, has reached its one hundred and eightieth number. It is giving its readers translations of some of Colonel Ingersoll's lectures.

THE domestic felicity of Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks was a proverb in Indiana. At a wedding ceremony in Shelbyville, three years ago, the officiating clergyman, after shaking hands with the newly-married couple, gave them his benediction in these words: "May you be as happy as Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks are."

THE city authorities of Providence, R. I., hav refused to license roller skating rinks. They hold that these pleces hav been found to promote immorality. Boston might take the cue from Providence, and suppress some of her more prominent places of religious amusement, beginning with Pastor Downs's circus.

THE first volume of General Grant's "Memoirs" was put upon the market on the 2d inst. The first edition will probably comprise a half million copies. Six hundred thousand hav been sold by subscription. Mrs. Grant's profits on the book already amount to more than $500,000. The second volume will be ready in March next.

THE pope has written a letter to the Catholic bishops of England, approving of their opposition to the radical scheme of free education. If the pope were to express himself fully, it would probably be found that he opposes general education of any kind, except enough to make a Catholic, which, in the case of many good papists, is far short of the three r's.

A QUESTIONABLE method for raising funds is to be resorted to at a church entertainment in Dayton, Ga. Each lady attending will be wrapped in a gossamer waterproof and veiled. They will then be "sold" at auction to the highest bidder, and the purchaser will secure the lady's company as a partner for the rest of the evening, and a share of the contents of her lunch basket.

THIS is a queer world, and it is difficult for a person possessing any sense of humor to keep his face straight. Our risibilities are just now excited by a little Catholic fetich which is at present in the pocket of the writer. It is a statue of St. Joseph about one inch in hight—a sort of pocket edition, as it were. He has an infant in his arms, but, strangely enough, the head of the saint is not decorated with horns. The statue has been duly blessed, the peculiar superstition attached to it being the belief that the person carrying it about him will always hav money in his pocket. The statue, blessing, tin case, and all, costs, we believe, five cents. By the way, following the precedent laid down in the case of Voltaire, it is probable that if the writer, at death, should be found with this fetich in his possession, he would be set down as, after all, a Catholic at heart.

BROTHER C. P. SOMERBY, of the New York TRUTH SEEKER, was in this city Dec. 1st and 2d, and materialized in the Ironclad ranch. The brother is on a business tour, and has taken in most of the prominent western and northwestern cities, together with a proper quantity of the free air of this almost boundless region. He looks as if the "tower" agreed with him. Brother Somerby seems to be a genial sort of person, and one that you can get acquainted with in about four minutes or four and a half. He left for Louisville Dec. 2d, and will head eastward from that point.—Ironclad Age.

CIRCULARS are now being extensivly distributed throughout the workshops, counting-rooms, and factories of this city, asking that the Metropolitan Museum of Art be thrown open to the public on Sundays. This petition should be signed by all who believe that institutions which are supported by the people should be conducted in such a manner that all may be benefited thereby, and that those who are confined in the workshop and factory six days in the week should hav an opportunity one day in the week to visit the museums, libraries, and other public institutions of the city. These institutions, for the preservation of which every citizen contributes his share, should not be run for the benefit of the "select few."—The Boycotter.

"THERE are," says the Rev. Jesse H. Jones, "three thousand Congregational ministers in this land, and Lyman Abbott, Noble (unknown near New York), my friend, and myself—five souls out of the three thousand—are all who hav ever lifted up a voice on the labor question, unless you count Beecher's 'bread and water.' It took ten souls to save Sodom; and they were not found there, and ten are not found here. Five souls out of three thousand! And where can you find five more in all the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist denomination of all grades? I remember just one, a Baptist who was in Paterson, N. J. If any one does know of others, let their names be recorded on high. They are a chosen and precious few. The spirit and temper of the ministry should be taken account of in this thing. One and all, in a solid mass, they are as shut against this subject as a great iron door in a stone wall slammed to, and bolted and barred. They consider that these problems are in nowise in their province; that their work is the 'conversion of souls,' the 'nurture of the church,' and nothing else."

W. H. BURR, of Washington, D. C., writes as follows to the New York Sun: "The Mail and Express says that the monument to Thomas Paine is 'in honor of Atheism, Anarchy, and dishonesty.' Those words contain three falsehoods. I think I know more of the life and character of Paine than any other man. His religious, political, and moral creed was expressed by himself in these words: 'I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life. Society in every state is a blessing, but government, even in its best state, is but a necessary evil. I hav lived an honest and useful life to mankind; my time has been spent in doing good, and I die in perfect composure and resignation to the will of my creator, God.' There is abundant proof that he lived up to this creed and was an exceptionally upright man. I need only adduce the testimony of the eminent and venerable Quaker, Willett Hicks, who knew him intimately. He said in 1841: 'Thomas Paine was a good man—an honest man.' Unfortunately the earliest biographies of Paine were libels. To counteract the effects of his 'Rights of Man,' in 1791 Lord Roxbury paid an anonymous writer £500 to produce a pretended life of Paine. Again, just after Paine's death in 1809, Cheetham, a convicted libeler, wrote another biography. Both were filled with lies. But worst of all, in 1846, just after the death of Bishop Fenwick, of Boston, a long letter was published, purporting to hav been written by him to his brother many years before, describing a visit by the young priest to the bedside of the dying Paine. The letter, though accredited to the bishop by his biographer, is doubtless a forgery. No Catholic priest ever visited Paine on his deathbed, and the pretended account of the deathbed scene is a wicked and clumsy fabrication. Paine was the most successful pamphleteer of his time, and yet he never took a penny for any of his literary work. His pay as exciseman for about twelve years, and for about three years' public service in America, never could hav supported him. And yet he was never poor, and was able to donate one year's salary as clerk of the Pennsylvania legislature to save Washington's army at Valley Forge. How, then, did he liv? In early life he enlisted on a privateersman and rose to the rank of captain. It is probable, therefore, that he quit the service with a considerable share of prize money, which he ever after used in doing good. It is generally believed that he received $3,000 from Congress. That sum was voted to him by resolution of the Continental Congress; but they had no money and he was never paid. Paine deserves a monument higher than that of Washington; but the stone erected in honor of the British spy by Cyrus W. Field ought to hav been blown up."

IN calling attention to several columns of mercantil opinions in favor of opening the museums on Sundays, the Herald says: "It is clear that our merchants are almost unanimously in favor of the movement. Their reasons are, of course, practical. They believe, as we do, that the poor man should not find every avenue to culture closed to him on the only day of the week when he has leisure. If it is morally elevating to look at beautiful pictures and statuary, if it is a beneficial stimulus to stand in the alcove of a library and see the books which hav been written on important subjects, then every man, rich and poor alike, should hav the door to such influences thrown wide open. The rich man can go through that door when he pleases. The poor man, who toils all the week for bread, finds it bolted against him on Sunday. There is something unfair in this. An open museum or library is an invitation to larger and broader thinking. The church should be the first to demand that every noble impulse should be encouraged, and in every possible way." As the Herald says, the church should be the first to demand the encouragement of noble impulses, but our diurnal contemporary will be greatly mistaken if it imagins the church will do so.

ALL the Chinamen closed their laundries early last Saturday night, and went to Mott street to help to move to a new temple the sacred god Joss, who conquered the heathen of the north, and brought the provinces of the Celestial Empire under a central government. The first temple to Joss, in this city, was opened about two years ago at number 16 Mott street. Forthwith there followed an era of prosperity in the Chinese quarter that was attributed only to the influence of Joss, and, in gratitude to him, the merchants decided to establish a temple and altar worthy of his prestige and power. Two thousand dollars was recently subscribed for the erection of a new temple at number 202 Chatham street, and to purchase genuin Chinese furniture and decorations. Leon Zoo, ex-priest of the Tauists, a sect dating back three thousand years B C., was made temporary priest. At twelve o'clock the Chinese consul, accompanied by fifty merchants in silken robes, entered the old temple. The air was fragrant with burning incense and sandalwood. Flaming red candles illuminated the scene. Bending low, priest and people asked of Joss his gracious permission to move him to his new temple. Joss sticks were ignited, and rice wines spilled to invigorate the god for his short journey. The following prayer was chanted: "O, merciful great Joss! We thy servants hav humbly this day prepared a new sanctuary, where thou and thine may eat and drink in peace, and where thy presence will be unprofaned by the language of wicked foreigners." When the god arrived at the new temple this prayer was addressed to him: "Welcome, thou mighty influence, representing all that is good, to thy new mansion, a small token of thy humble servants' loyalty." When the invocations to Joss ceased the company arose and feasted royally in his honor. The priest at the altar chanted a song, and the pious revelry continued until dawn.

News of the Week.

FORTY-NINE bartenders were arrested by New York policemen for selling liquor last Sunday.

GEN. ALEX. SHALER, president of the Board of Health, is under arrest charged with receiving bribes.

SENATOR JOHN SHERMAN has been selected by the Republicans to preside over the Senate in place of Vice President Hendricks.

MAYOR GRACE of New York has brought a libel suit against the New York World, laying the damages at $50,000. The World had called Mayor Grace a fraud.

WM. H. VANDERBILT, the New York railroad king, died suddenly of apoplexy in his Fifth avenue palace on Tuesday, the 8th, aged 64. He was the richest man in the world.

CHARLES RAY, of this city, having discovered that his wife was untrue to him, shot her and then poisoned himself. He was buried last Monday, but his wife will recover.

UNITED STATES troops hav been sent to Salt Lake City in anticipation of a Mormon outbreak against the Federal officers. There is said to be little probability of any trouble.

THE boycott of Straiton & Storm's cigars has been declared at an end, and the two thousand employees who were recently locked out by the firm will resume work during the present week.

Two trains on the Brooklyn bridge crashed together last Saturday, in consequence of the grip failing to hold the cable by which the cars are drawn. Five persons were seriously and others slightly injured.

CANON FARRAR, in his farewell address, said that he had nowhere been treated kinder than in the United States. He hoped America would lead England in temperance, as England led America in emancipation.

THE Baptist conference has added to the Rev. Mr. Downs's other troubles by disclaiming all fellowship with him, and expelling him from the conference. This is the way of the religious world: Kick a man when he is DOWLS.

J. K. EMMET, the comedian, recently went on a spree the expense of which, including broken engagements, was not less than forty thousand dollars. He tapered off his drunk with an attack of delirium tremens, and is now in the hospital.

SIX children, of Newark, N. J., who hav been bitten by a rabid dog, will be sent to Europe to be treated for hydrophobia by M. Pasteur, the French chemist. The parents of the children are poor, and the expenses of the trip will be paid by subscription.

THE boycott upon a German theater manager of this city by the labor unions because he employed "rat" musicians is reported successful, the manager having capitulated and paid all costs. It seems that the workingman can make himself effectiv anywhere except at the polls.

WINTER came down upon New York last Saturday night with a wild swoop and a cold wave. Some snow fell on frozen ground. There was a great gale at sea, and much damage is reported. Dispatches from Aspinwall, C. A., announce a terrific norther, which wrecked a half-dozen vessels with a loss of life which is unknown.

MRS ROBERTS, wife of the postmaster at Tampico (Wash. Ter.) complained that her husband habitually beat her, and one day last week a dozen women of the place took the wretch out and gave him a public flogging. He left for unknown parts, and the wife is now acting postmistress with a hope of being continued in the position by President Cleveland.

IN accordance with a sanitary scheme recently adopted, the municipal authorities of Marseilles, France, ordered the demolition of the church of St. Martin. The clergymen connected with the church strenuously opposed the execution of the order. On the 6th a mob of five thousand people gathered around the church and assaulted the priests as they were leaving the edifice. Many arrests were made.

Selections and Communications.

Motley and Monarch.

From the North American Review.

Strange mingling of mirth and tears, of the tragic and grotesque, of the cap and crown, of Socrates and Rabelais, of Æsop and Marcus Aurelius, of all that is gentle and just, humorous and honest, merciful, wise, laughable, lovable, and divine, and all consecrated to the use of man; while through all, and over all, an overwhelming sense of obligation, of chivalric loyalty to truth, and upon all the shadow of the tragic end.

Nearly all the great historic characters are impossible monsters, disproportioned by flattery or by calumny deformed. We know nothing of their peculiarities, or nothing but their peculiarities. About the roots of these oaks there clings none of the earth of humanity. Washington is now only a steel engraving. About the real man who lived, and loved, and hated, and schemed we know but little. The glass through which we look at him is of such high magnifying power that the features are exceedingly indistinct. Hundreds of people are now engaged in smoothing out the lines of Lincoln's face—forcing all features to the common mold—so that he may be known, not as he really was, but, according to their poor standard, as he should hav been.

Lincoln was not a type. He stands alone—no ancestors, no fellows, and no successors. He had the advantage of living in a new country, of social equality, of personal freedom, of seeing in the horizon of his future the perpetual star of hope. He preserved his individuality and his self-respect. He knew and mingled with men of every kind; and, after all, men are the best books. He became acquainted with the ambitions and hopes of the heart, the means used to accomplish ends, the springs of action and the seeds of thought. He was familiar with nature, with actual things, with common facts. He loved and appreciated the poem of the year, the drama of the seasons.

In a new country a man must possess at least three virtues—honesty, courage, and generosity. In cultivated society, cultivation is often more important than soil. A well-executed counterfeit passes more readily than a blurred genuin. It is necessary only to observe the unwritten laws of society—to be honest enough to keep out of prison, and generous enough to subscribe in public—where the subscription can be defended as an investment. In a new country, character is essential; in the old, reputation is sufficient. In the new, they find what a man really is; in the old, he generally passes for what he resembles. People separated only by distance are much nearer together than those divided by the walls of caste.

It is no advantage to liv in a great city, where poverty degrades and failure brings despair. The fields are lovelier than paved streets, and the great forest than walls of brick. Oaks and elms are more poetic than steeples and chimneys. In the country is the idea of home. There you see the rising and setting sun; you become acquainted with the stars and clouds. The constellations are your friends. You hear the rain on the roof and listen to the rhythmic sighing of the winds. You are thrilled by the resurrection called spring, touched and saddened by autumn, the grace and poetry of death. Every field is a picture, a landscape; every landscape a poem; ev ery flower a tender thought; and every forest a fairy-land. In the country you preserve your identity—your personality. There you are an aggregation of atoms, but in the city you are only an atom of an aggregation.

Lincoln never finished his education. To the night of his death he was a pupil, a learner, an inquirer, a seeker after knowledge. You hav no idea how many men are spoiled by what is called education. For the most part, colleges are places where pebbles are polished and diamonds are dimmed. If Shakspere had graduated at Oxford, he might hav been a quibbling attorney or a hypocritical parson.

Lincoln was a many-sided man, acquainted with smiles and tears, complex in brain, single in heart, direct as light; and his words, candid as mirrors, gave the perfect image of his thought. He was never afraid to ask—never too dignified to admit that he did not know. No man had keener wit or kinder humor. He was not solemn. Solemnity is a mask worn by ignorance and hypocrisy—it is the preface, prolog, and index to the cunning or the stupid. He was natural in his life and thought—master of the story-teller's art, in illustration apt, in application perfect; liberal in speech, shocking Pharisees and prudes, using any word that wit could disinfect.

He was a logician. Logic is the necessary product of intelligence and sincerity. It cannot be learned. It is the child of a clear head and a good heart. He was candid, and with candor often deceived the deceitful. He had intellect without arrogance, genius without pride, and religion without cant—that is to say, without bigotry and without deceit.

He was an orator—clear, sincere, natural. He did not pretend. He did not say what he thought others thought, but what he thought. If you wish to be sublime you must be natural—you must keep close to the grass. You must sit by the fireside of the heart; above the clouds it is too cold. You must be simple in your speech; too much polish suggests insincerity. The great orator idealizes the real, transfigures the common, makes even the inanimate throb and thrill, fills the gallery of the imagination with statues and pictures perfect in form and color, brings to light the gold hoarded by memory—the miser shows the glittering coin to the spendthrift hope—enriches the brain, ennobles the heart, and quickens the conscience. Between his lips words bud and blossom.

If you wish to know the difference between an orator and an elocutionist—between what is felt and what is said—between what the heart and brain can do together and what the brain can do alone—read Lincoln's wondrous words at Gettysburg, and then the speech of Edward Everett. The oration of Lincoln will never be forgotten. It will liv until languages are dead and lips are dust. The speech of Everett will never be read. The elocutionists believe in the virtue of voice, the sublimity of syntax, the majesty of long sentences, and the genius of gesture. The orator loves the real, the simple, the natural. He places the thought above all. He knows that the greatest ideas should be expressed in the shortest words — that the greatest statues need the least drapery.

Lincoln was an immense personality—firm but not obstinate. Obstinacy is egotism—firmness, heroism. He influenced others without effort, unconsciously; and they submitted to him as men submit to nature, unconsciously. He was severe with himself, and for that reason lenient with others. He appeared to apologize for being kinder than his fellows. He did merciful things as stealthily as others committed crimes. Almost ashamed of tenderness, he said and did the noblest words and deeds with that charming confusion—that awkwardness—that is the perfect grace of modesty. As a noble man, wishing to pay a small debt to a poor neighbor, reluctantly offers a hundred-dollar bill and asks for change, fearing that he may be suspected either of making a display of wealth or a pretense of payment, so Lincoln hesitated to show his wealth of goodness, even to the best he knew.

A great man stooping, not wishing to make his fellows feel that they were small or mean.

He knew others, because perfectly acquainted with himself. He cared nothing for place, but everything for principle; nothing for money, but everything for independence. Where no principle was involved, easily swayed—willing to go slowly if in the right direction—sometimes willing to stop, but he would not go back, and he would not go wrong. He was willing to wait. He knew that the event was not waiting, and that fate was not the fool of chance. He knew that slavery had defenders, but no defense, and that they who attack the right must wound themselvs. He was neither tyrant nor slave. He neither knelt nor scorned. With him, men were neither great nor small—they were simply right or wrong. Through manners, clothes, titles, rags, and race, he saw the real—that which is. Beyond accident, policy, compromise, and war, he saw the end. He was patient as Destiny, whose undecipherable hieroglyphs were so deeply graven on his sad and tragic face.

Nothing discloses real character like the use of power. It is easy for the weak to be gentle. Most people can bear adversity. But if you wish to know what a man really is, giv him power. This is the supreme test. It is the glory of Lincoln that, having almost absolute power, he never abused it, except upon the side of mercy.

Wealth could not purchase, power could not awe, this divine, this loving man. He knew no fear except the fear of doing wrong. Hating slavery, pitying the master—seeking to conquer, not persons, but prejudices—he was the embodiment of the self-denial, the courage, the hope, and the nobility of a nation. He spoke, not to inflame, not to upbraid, but to convince. He raised his hands, not to strike, but in benediction. He longed to pardon. He loved to see the pearls of joy on the cheeks of a wife whose husband he had rescued from death.

Lincoln was the grandest figure of the fiercest civil war. He is the gentlest memory of our world.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Embracing Presbyterian Widows.

The dignified president of the presbytery, who has a goodly number of D.'s and L.'s appended to his name, directed a brother clergyman to communicate, either orally or by letter, with the widows residing within the bounds of the presbytery, and inquire after their domestic wants and comforts, and report at the next convention of the clergy. At the appointed time Brother Jones reported. The dignified president, who knows how to enjoy a good joke, when made with clerical solemnity, arose and said, with impressiv gravity: "Brother Jones, are you certain that you hav embraced all the widows in our presbytery?" The clapping of hands and stamping of feet and convulsiv laughter satisfied the sober-minded president that Brother Jones had been faithful in his duty.

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

A LECTURE BY T. B. WAKEMAN (CONTINUED).

XI.—THE LEARNED PROFESSIONS WILL BE RECOGNIZED AS A SPIRITUAL POWER SELECTED AND APPOINTED FOR THEIR APPROVED FITNESS TO EDUCATE, ADVISE, AND CONSECRATE.—THEY WILL TAKE THE PLACE OF THE OLD PRIESTHOOD AND BE PAID AND HONORED AS SECULAR AND NECESSARY FRIENDS, EDUCATORS, AND ADVISERS OF THE PEOPLE.

The states or counties will provide for the limitation and payment of the members of these professions, but will not limit the liberty of others to practice these professions if the people prefer to advise with them. It is not probable, however, that the people will to any great extent prefer to consult and pay those who are unlicensed and unsalaried when they can have the dispensations and services of others free; nor is it probable that any really fitted for professional work will long stay outside of professions adequately supported by salaries. Learning will, as now, have its permanent home in universities, which will be increased in number, supported by the states, and be subject to their general control.

One of their chief duties should be the education of teachers and their nomination as such for the purposes of common school or public education, but the support of the schools and teachers should be provided by the state and county, and every school district should have the ultimate approval or even selection of its teachers.

The methods of education will evidently be modified so as to develop the faculties of the pupil instead of stuffing the memory, and the branches taught will be rearranged so as to give a general view of the world as it is, instead of traditions and dead languages. To this end the Positive classification of the sciences should be presented to the students' mind as early as possible, in its simplest form (mineral, vegetable, and animal), which should be enlarged and extended to details as the student proceeds, so that the whole course of education to the highest degree would be but an enlargement of the same system of classification which was put into his hands when a child as the foundation and beginning of all knowledge. By means of this positiv or scientific classification of all human knowledge the whole world lies before the mind as a map and is intelligible. Those who have not grasped the order of this classification never have any clear idea of the world into which they have stumbled. The prejudice is blind and foolish which does not adopt this wonderful principle of the correlative sciences as the basis of all learning and education. By it the student will acquire a general outline map of that learning which those who have special talents or leisure will, in the several learned professions, spend perhaps a lifetime in pursuing and unfolding. Thus the mass of the community, including the women, will be informed generally as to all the sciences, which only their professors will be able to master in detail.

Nor will the traditions, histories, and languages of past ages be wholly omitted from the course of lectures and study. The politics, religions, arts, and languages of each of the five great historical integrations of the human race will be revived and made as real as possible to our modern world. Thus Greek and Latin will reappear as parts of the science of language and of history. They can never be excluded from the curriculum, but will be taught in a far more rational way than now. They will for years to come form the best illustrations of the grand sciences of logic and language, as well as the chief repositories of the treasures of the past.

Another step of progress in education can be readily foreseen: that is, that it will hav more and more a concrete industrial and practical side wherewith to realize and balance its theoretical instruction, and this will be followed by more decided attention to art, morals, and motives. In a word, the scientific and human theory of education will reach alike the Head, the Hand, and the Heart (the three H's), and insure the development and culture of our whole nature. By natural and artificial selection, those best fitted would pass into the learned professions; others would naturally go from the university, or high schools, to the active life most suitable to each.

Two additional aids to education will doubtless be found of great importance, and are worthy of increased attention: viz., the kindergarten and the Sunday-school. While it is true that education must begin in the home and nursery, it should not be left there unguided even in childhood. Even at that early period there is keenly felt the pleasure of play and activity where companionship, guidance, and protection are afforded. There the young ideas first learn to shoot, and the real bent of character is formed for life. Our educated and Liberal women are eminently fitted for this work, and its organization and prosecution is recommended to their earnest attention.

Nor less can the new Faith dispense with the Sunday schools or Sunday meetings of old and young. Wherever sufficient numbers can be found there will be felt the need of meetings to further the knowledge of the people by lectures, exhibitions, and instructions; and also to keep up and satisfy the needs of social life by recreations where art, and music, and the dance may be used without abuse. On frequent occasions, and always on Sundays, the libraries, museums, and the collections and productions of art should be freely opened and exhibited to the people. On Sunday the life of the people should be opened up to the true sun-worship in the enjoyment of nature as far as possible, aided by all that learning, art, and social gatherings can add to the joy and glorification of all that is good and noble in human nature, and all that tends to its welfare and advancement.

Here it is proper to note, as before, the reason why Liberals have not concurred and cannot concur in Auguste Comte's view of the offices of the Professions or "Spiritual power" in the future. To them with their pope at Paris he practically commits the future of the world organized under a Spiritual Hierarchy. The temporal power will in his view fall into small unconfederated states, under the practical control of this Hierarchy, who shall "advise, regulate, and consecrate" as to all affairs of importance. We have pointed out that instead of this papacy the line of evolution plainly shows that the peoples, in democratic and federated republics, will do the regulating as a practical secular power. The educating, advising, and consecrating power will therefore be subject to the support and practical control of the people and of these Republics. In a secular world the secular temporal power, resting on the consent of the governed, must needs control and regulate all practical affairs, as before shown. The learned professions, therefore, will not be able to interfere with popular freedom, although they to their best will advise, educate, and consecrate. In performing these duties they will confer the greatest benefits they can upon the world, which will for the first time in centuries be free from the regulating of popes, priests, philosophers, and ideologists generally, until they have been able to convince the people, so as to make their ideas practicable and finally practical through the people. This fundamental separation of the temporal and spiritual powers of church and state—to use the old phrase—is the fundamental condition of popular liberty and of safe and healthy evolution. Comte's mistake was, not in working out the distinction of these powers, but in assigning the regulating and supreme power to a Spiritual Hierarchy instead of to the temporal secular Republic, which he did not foresee. The head and hand will always have to meet and tackle with the active world, but back of them should lie the educated and enlightened heart as their inspiration and motiv power. Thus only can be realized Comte's admirable maxim:

"The intellect should always be the servant of the heart, but never its slave."

An Extraordinary Book.—I.

ARE MOST OF THE LATIN AND GREEK CLASSICS, TOGETHER WITH ALL THE WRITINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS, FORGERIES OF THE FOURTEENTH, FIFTEENTH, AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES?

Jean Hardouin, a French Jesuit, died in 1729, aged eighty-three years. He was deeply versed in history, languages, and numismatology. At the age of forty-six he began to suspect that certain writings of the Christian fathers were spurious, and soon became convinced that none of them were genuin. Then turning his attention to the Greek and Latin classics, he found evidence sufficient to convince him that most of those also were forgeries. He admitted only two Greek and four Latin authors to be genuin. The Greek authors were Homer and Herodotus; the Latin authors, Cicero, Pliny the elder, Horace (only the Satires and Epistles), and Virgil (only the Bucolics and Georgics). The writings of the Old and New Testaments he of course acknowledged to be genuin, but all the rest of the Christian literature, purporting to emanate from the fathers of the church, together with all the Greek and Latin classics, with the exceptions above named, he maintained were fabricated by Benedictine monks, after the middle of the thirteenth century.

Believing that the Latin codex of the New Testament was the earliest, and that the Greek was a later translation, he asserted that Jesus and his apostles spoke and wrote in Latin.*

For some of these bizarre opinions he was reprimanded by his superiors and debarred from promotion in the church. The Parlement de Paris suppressed his book, and in 1708 he was compelled, like Galileo, to make a public retraction. But he nevertheless reproduced his opinions in another book, written or completed just before his death in 1729.

In this latest exposition of his judgment of the ancient writings (Ad Censuram Scriptorum Veterum Prolegomena) he substitutes Plautus for Cicero, as one of the four genuin Latin authors. Plautus was a comic poet who lived a hundred years before Cicero. If Hardouin at first supposed that the writings of Cicero were authentic, he doubtless afterward found cogent reasons for believing them to be spurious.

Petrarch, who died in 1374, at the age of seventy, appears to hav been the first finder of ancient manuscripts buried in the dust of monastic libraries. About 1335 he succeeded in finding some of Cicero's "Familiar Epistles," and two of his orations. He was not able, he says, to procure any of the rare works of the renowned Roman orator, except two books on "Glory," which, however, he lost again very soon by lending to a friend.

In the next century, Poggio Bracciolini (who is now proved to hav forged the "Annals" of Tacitus) discovered the entire collection of Cicero's "Epistles to Atticus," also a few to Brutus and to Quintus. Many years later some more epistles of Cicero to Brutus and of Brutus to Cicero were found in Germany.

Suspicion now began to be entertained, not perhaps of the genuinness of the writings discovered by Petrarch and Poggio, but of those last found. Erasmus regarded the letters of Brutus as the declamatory compositions of some Sophist; others said the same of Cicero's letters.

In 1741, Dr. Conyers Middleton, librarian of the University of Cambridge, published a "Life of Cicero," in which he made great use of these suspected letters. This brought out an assault upon their genuinness by the Rev. Mr. Tunston, orator of the same university, who maintained that they were forged by some Sophist. Dr. Middleton answered in an elaborate defense of all but one of the letters, namely, that of Cicero to Octavius, which he conceded to be a forgery,

This was in 1743, seven years before Middleton's death, and twenty-two years before the publication of Hardouin's posthumous work, in which he substituted Plautus for Cicero, as one of the four genuin Latin authors. Dr. Middleton therefore knew little or nothing of Hardouin's argument against the authenticity of the ancient Latin and Greek literature—only perhaps that as early as 1592 he had asserted that there were but four genuin Latin authors whose works had survived, one of whom was Cicero; and that for the publication of this, together with some other similar opinions, the learned Jesuit had been compelled to recant in 1708.

As a true Catholic, Hardouin was bound to maintain the paramount authority of the sacred scriptures and tradition. But he saw that the opinions of the so-called fathers was often opposed to the traditions of the church, therefore he consistently denied the authority of the fathers as against tradition, and when he discovered, as he undoubtedly believed, that all the writings of the fathers were forged by Benedictine monks, he felt it his duty to expose the fraud in the interest of Christianity.

He saw that modern heresy was based on the writings of the fathers, particularly St. Augustine; therefore, if it could be shown that these writings were forged, heresy would hav no solid foundation. The Benedictine order was instituted about the year 529, and from that time through all the dark ages they were the main propagators of Christianity, and the only repositories of learning. The order of Jesuits began in 1534, and of Jansenists in 1585. In the full conviction that all the early church history was a forgery, Father Hardouin said:

> There was no public heresy, nor any public persecution, in the church from its foundation among the gentiles, and the abolition of the synagog, up to the time of Wicliff (1324–1384), who first used the forged books under the names of Augustine, and others, as weapons against the church. So Augustine begat Wicliff, Wicliff begat Luther, Luther begat Calvin, and Calvin begat Jansen. And these are about all the heresies Christianity has ever seen.
>
> All the heresies that we read about in these pretended ancient books are fictions, gotten up for the purpose of propagating Atheism under the pretext of opposing heresy. They are all inexplicable and silly—Manicheans, Arians, Macedonians, Eutychians, Nestorians, Pelagians, and all the rest (p. 212).

In our further extracts from Hardouin's book we shall not undertake to make a full and literal translation, but will endeavor to giv his meaning in as few words as possible.

For the purpose of upholding the great fraud, he says, it was necessary, in the first place, to write ecclesiastical history, for thus it could be made to appear what the faith and practice of the church had been in early times. And in preparing this history (i.e., of Eusebius and others) it was necessary to establish a succession of Roman pontiffs, making it appear about what time each one held the office. So pseudo-Augustine describes them up to his time. But their names are fictitious. For example, of Linus (the successor of St. Peter) there is no trace at all at Rome—no chapel, no memorial. Not but that there was an uninterrupted succession of popes, but their names and characters are not to be determined by these books.

Some will be shocked at being told that ecclesiastical history is mostly fabulous. But why? Is not the Catholic religion divine, and are not its doctrins holy? But false history is only mischievous; it is an enemy sowing tares.

In 1690 it first dawned upon me that the works of Augustine and others were fabricated. In 1693, when I announced my conviction that all the ancient patristic writings were spurious, certain Catholics disputed it—good men of sound minds, but nevertheless rather weak. For they did not realize that the Calvinists of Holland and Germany were most vociferous against me, because it was plain enough that if St. Augustine was taken away, their foundation was gone.

With God's help I hav already (in former works) demolished Augustine, Bernard, and Thomas (Aquinas), together with many councils, and now, if my life is spared, I am going to assail other similar writings. And if the holy apostolic see wishes hereafter to pass judgment upon my present work, may I liv to see the day, but I trust it will not submit the case to judges taken from the royal family (familia Regulari), who think that because any part of these so-called ancient writings emanated from their bosom therefore they must be saved at all hazards. Let the case be submitted to secular theologians, or to men of character and standing belonging to those orders who wish to preserve only the good in religion, and are willing that the bad should perish.

(This is a reflection on the unfairness of his trial and condemnation in 1708.)

It was necessary for these impious forgers to produce very many books so as to make it appear that unwritten tradition is opposed to the ancient records. And by a multitude of volumes they hoped to render the fraud less easy of detection. As many works in Latin, so many in Greek were necessary, lest it should be suspected that it was all done in the Latin quarter. And they made a distribution like this: To Greece they gave (Gregory) Nanzianzen and Chrysostom; to Cappadocia, Basilius and (Gregory) Nyssenus; to the East, Theodoretus and Eusebius; to Egypt, Clement, Origen, Athanasius, and Cyril; to Italy, Ambrose, Leo (I.), and Gregory; to Palestine and Syria, Justin and Cyril of Damascus; to Cyprus, Epiphanius; to Africa, Tertullian, Cyprian, Optatus, Augustine, and Fulgentius; and to other parts many more.

It was necessary to hav so many volumes of history, so many of councils, and so many of other kinds; to fabricate so many decretals, canons, definitions, forms of prayer, histories, controversies, etc. These writings were continued through all the ages, lest the fraud of one age should be suspected. So the work was divided into ages, with the parts assigned to each, and thus the pretended doctrins and disciplin grew up by degrees.

The lying rascals did not cease their work, but kept on fabricating false monuments of the former times. They meant to cover the world with their forgeries, so that nothing should be read, if possible, except what they furnished.

They forged apocryphal books: for example, the "Clementines" (Homilies and Recognitions containing the story of Clement of Rome), the "Preaching of Peter," and the "Pastor of Hirmas." ANTICHRIST.

*The notion of Hardouin was scarcely more absurd than that Jesus and his apostles spoke or wrote in Greek. It is now known and conceded that the vernacular of Palestine was Aramaic, which was substantially Syriac, and we hav an ancient version of the New Testament in the Syriac language. The learned Josephus, when he came to translate his "Antiquities" into Greek, said: "I grew weary and went on slowly, it being a large subject, and a difficult thing to translate our history into a foreign, and to us unaccustomed, language."

Crankery.

Crankery is the exaltation of enthusiasm. Its excess only is to be avoided. The crank is above all others the avant courier in progress. He marshals the way society is going, and such instruments as his it has to use. He needs no bell to invite him, and instead of expressing the desire that his victim may not hear the knell that summons him, he shrieks, he yells, he "disturbs the isle from its propriety," to giv all warning. He is a modern Cassandra, howling around the ramparts, intimating to each and all that the Priam family of modern days are arming, and about to go for the Trojans of our times. Thanks for the crank! Society may exclaim against him as bitterly as it pleases, but, as says the adage, "The cat will mew, the dog will hav its day." Like his great prototype, he will continue to say, "Ecce Homo," or, as the darkey put it, "I are he." Let us kindly bear with the crank. Some one said: "The mission of culture is to enable us to endure each other." Well, let us endure. I shake hands with my lusty-tongued brother, and, with a benison, say, "Go ahead."

Donn Piatt says: "We get cranky over our pet theories," and thereupon gets cranky. He becomes unexampled in his bewildering despair. The blackness of ashes is around him. Not a single star is to be seen in all society's canopy. "There's husbandry in life." Its candles are all out. A fearful future shuts in the witches' cauldron of the past, when the weird sisters were seen pouring in sow's blood and other tid-bits for drablerie, while chanting their cheerless rhythm, "Double, double, toil and trouble." Over the gloomy archway of life is everywhere seen the line of Dante burning on the gateway of hell: "Let all who enter here leave hope behind."

Much thinking hath made the Donn mad. My versifier has said:

> I grant the Donn replete with vim,
> Acrostic, dazzling, subtle,
> Flying thoughts' eternal shuttle,
> But soundness there is naught to him.

The Donn has evidently taken the role of the Welsh knight, calling spirits from the vasty deep, and one has come at his bidding—a demoniac Frankenstein monster, to poison and curse his life.

You will search in vain in our current literature for a loftier example of the high-toned lugubrious than one of the Donn's letters affords, published in John Swinton's Paper of the late September issues. The diatribes of the man of Mac-o'-cheek are fearful; more terrible by far than are the denunciations of the prophets of holy writ, which involve only a certain amount of vengeance, then a season of quiet and plenty. With the Donn life is a prolongation of tweedledee and tweedledum; no change beyond "out of the frying-pan into the fire." Our little lives are rounded with a dream of coming ill. All the while there is a steady accretion of social combustibles; then a flaring out of flames of wrath—a crying out of havoc" and letting slip the dogs of war; each subsidence into the deceptiv quiet but to gather fresh fuel for periodic devastations. Cheerful, ain't it? M.

The Liberal Club.

The 391st regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was, in the language of the secretary, held at the usual time and place. It was the occasion of Mr. Reynolds's first appearance as an illustrated lecturer. Across the end of the hall where the platform is, a large curtain concealed the piano and the bust of the great Masonic jabberwock which adorns a bracket at the rear of the stage. In the center of the room was a black screen drawn around a framework some six feet high, and through a rift in the end of this a stereopticon peeked out with fiery eye, and threw its glance on the curtain. The man with a badge-pin was inside the screen, manipulating, in the manner necessary to the best effect, the setscrews, faucets, slides, and other gilguys that go to make up a stereopticon.

The audience came in early and fast, and soon filled the hall. Many insisted upon sitting in the aisle in front of the machine. One gentleman with a bald head got directly in the range of the instrument, and the manipulator threw an ornamental and brilliant invitation to "SUBSCRIBE FOR THE TRUTH SEEKER" on his depilated poll. Dr. Foote, Jr., kindly stepped into the aisle, caught the same legend on his back, and induced the baldheaded man to move.

All this was preliminary. The regular proceedings began when President Wakeman introduced Mr. Reynolds and a gorgeous picture came on the curtain bearing the word "Welcome" in conspicuous letters. Mr. Reynolds explained that these lectures and views which he proposed to giv were the result of the late D. M. Bennett's trip around the world. A fine likeness of Mr. Bennett appearing here was welcomed with applause. The first scene represented Damascus, one of the oldest cities in the world. Then came the site of the house of Naaman, the man who was told to dip seven times in the Jordan as a cure for leprosy, but who, with considerable local pride, preferred the waters of Parphar and Arbana. A mosque at Damascus, both exterior and interior, followed. Then came a characteristic scene in Palestine representing travelers mounted on camels. The next mount was Mount Hermon, which the psalmist exhorted to rejoice in the name of the Lord. Following came Cesarea Philippi, then a specimen of the cedar of Lebanon; the man at present in possession of Palestine, being an Arab; also Cana of Galilee, where, at a wedding, Christ turned water into wine to keep up the hilarities of the occasion. Now we hav the Sea of Galilee, the smallest sea in the world. Here is a view of Tiberias, near Lake Genesereth. It was in this lake that the swine are supposed to hav commited suicide by drowning, this being the only body of water that has tombs within two miles of it, which distance the swine must hav run before they struck water. Nazareth follows. It will be remembered that the infant Jesus was carried to Nazareth that the prophecy might be fulfiled which says he shall be called a Nazarite, and which has no more reference to Nazareth than to any other city.

The way plowing is done in Palestine was represented by an Arab agriculturist stopping to rest his team. The cattle, which looked about the size of two-year-old heifers, were yoked together in a very bungling manner, and attached to a plow made of the crooked limb of a tree. The Arab standing by held a goadstick in his hand so big as to throw the picture out of proportion. The goad was rather larger than the plow.

Now the semi-globular summit of Mount Tabor looms up. This summit has been regarded as the "high mountain apart" from which Jesus is said to hav ascended or been transfigured in the presence of Peter, James, and John. As the top of this mountain, however, was occupied by a fortified town two hundred and fifty years before Christ and sixty years afterward, it is possible that this is a mistake.

Samaria, next viewed, stands in about the center of Palestine. Seven miles from Samaria is Shechem, which has somewhat replaced Samaria as a metropolis. The Samaritans hav an old so-called "Pentateuch roll," shown on the curtain, said to be 3,400 years old. It is possibly four hundred years old.

The views then passed on, taking in pictures of the "creation," Jacob's well, Bethany, Gethsemane, including the oliv-tree under which Jesus sweat, as it were, great drops of blood, and other miscellaneous views.

Mr. Reynolds's lecture accompaniment was a sharp and thorough examination and refutation of most of the claims made about happenings in this so-called holy land. The pictures were not all successfully brought out, but most of them were realistic and beautiful. Whatever defect existed was attributable to the man with the badge-pin, who burnt his fingers and worked himself into a profuse perspiration, besides seriously alarming the lady visitors by illuminations and mysterious noises not contemplated by the lecturer. It takes as much skill and experience to run a stereopticon as to manage a large family.

Taken altogether, the entertainment was an interesting one. Mr. Reynolds is an able talker, the stereopticon is a powerful instrument, and the views are magnificent. Owing to the size of the stage the spread of curtain on this occasion was not ample enough to admit of the instrument's doing itself justice. But with skill and familiarity attained by operator and lecturer, and with a good surface of canvas, this will be one of the best and most instructiv entertainments to be found anywhere.

The exhibition was followed by a short commendatory speech by Mr. Wakeman, a little criticism from Mr. Pink, and a few words of thanks from the lecturer.

Treasurer's Report of the National Liberal Orphans' Home.

In the last number of the Liberal Mr. Walser submits the following remarks and financial report of the condition of this projected institution. He says:

We hav done nothing as yet in the way of erecting buildings for the Home, for the reason that money comes in too slowly to risk a commencement; and we deemed it proper to keep the money on interest until a greater revival in the minds of our Liberal friends takes place, and they conclude to do something worthy of big-hearted philanthropists and advanced thinkers.

There seems to be a strong desire among many to engraft on the National Liberal Orphans' Home a home for the old and infirm, which we think could very well be done. There are thousands of old people who are homeless, many of whom hav some money, which they would gladly add to a permanent home where they could hav all the comforts of life to be transmitted through all time to bless the declining years of others. This is a feasible thought, and well worth the consideration of our friends.

The site for the Home is within the corporate limits of Liberal, Mo., and is a most beautiful one, on which we should hav creditable buildings.

CR.

42 10–100 acres of land at the present value of	$2,105.00
Cash donations,	1,113.14
Interest collected up to March 1, 1885,	129.00
Grass sold in 1884,	5.00
Total Cash Receipts,	1,247.14

DR.

Cash for blank book,	1.00
Cash for postage stamps,	8.50
Printing articles of incorporation and certificates of membership,	50.00
Sketch of proposed buildings	10.00
Express on books,	.30
Recording mortgage,	1.25
Total,	71.05
Total cash on hands,	1,176.09
Value of land,	2,105.00
Total assets,	3,281.09

Liberal, Mo., Nov. 23, 1885. G. H. WALSER, Treasurer.

What does the "recording mortgage" mean?

A Letter from Parker Pillsbury.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Circumstances are just now transpiring bringing to my knowledge the fact that at the recent Liberal Congress in Albany my humble name was used as a vice-president for the association under its new name and plan of organization.

I did not know that I was held as really a member of the body under any name. I hav not for a number of years attended any of its meetings, having in all that time kept aloof from public conventions and gatherings of that description as no more my appropriate field of service and operation.

Meantime let me not be presumed, even at my advanced age, to hav wearied in or retired from the conflict. On the contrary, I am expecting to witness, and, in my way, participate in, even fiercer battles than any we hav yet waged with "the powers of darkness," especially in "the high places" of the church.

The pulpit has not yet put forth half its power. Not half, Mr. Editor! Remember, I was once up there myself, and only testify to what my own eyes hav seen. And the capital of the nation is at its command; and so is the Conscience, too, so far as it is the creature of clerical formation, as well of women as of men, if not, indeed, more. And the fears of myriads of what they call "the ungodly and the sinners" are more with them than with anybody else. Scarcely one sinner of them all dares die, get married, or be buried without a priest. As well Protestant sinner as Catholic will, must, hav "extreme unction" in some priestly form. And all priesthoods see it and know it. And Jew, Catholic, and Protestant people will in the final struggle make common cause against the people, especially all such as dare question their authority or defy their power. Not the "three unclean spirits that went forth like frogs out of the mouths of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet" in the visions of Patmos were more loathsome or more fearful (vide Rev. xvi, 12–16)!

And permit me, Mr. Editor, in a word, to caution your patrons and readers, and all who dare enter the terrible encounter ere long to be waged, not to underestimate their foe, in numbers, in influence, in power. Truth and light will triumph at last. They only are Omnipotence. And they are Omnipotence, no matter about other name.

Pardon so much trespass on space and time. My errand to you, not yet done, is to ask you to be so kind as to inform the proper officer that I desire my name erased from the roll of vice-presidents of the new association, and from the association itself, if found among its membership, as possibly it may be.

And then, Mr. Editor, you may still count on me to the best of my humble powers, as faithfully, hopefully, workfully (hopefully because workfully) yours till victory crown our struggles or death discharge us from them.

Yours for every good word, work, and way,

Concord, N. H., Dec., 1885. PARKER PILLSBURY.

Mr. Watts at Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Our Liberal friend, Mr. D. A. Blodgett, continues to make it interesting for our orthodox friends in this city. He brought Mr. Watts here again last week. On last Sunday Mr. Watts delivered two lectures; one in the morning on "The Bible: Its Origin and Teachings," and in the evening, "Unbelief: Its Nature and Services to Humanity." The very large opera house (Power's), which has a seating capacity of two thousand, was well filled in the morning, and literally packed in the evening. The attention and interest of the audiences was most intense, frequent outbursts of applause demonstrating the hearty approval of the speaker's utterances. After the evening lecture of Sunday, a reception was given Mr. Watts at the parlors of Sweet's Hotel, at which many were present, a majority ladies, to make the personal acquaintance of the affable Englishman. It was a pleasant affair.

By special request, and in order to clear up some misapprehension, a little ignorance, and much misrepresentation of the aim and purposes of the American Secular Union, Mr. Watts remained and delivered a lecture upon that subject, Monday night, to a crowded house. Mr. Watts is so favorably known that a mere mention of his name in this city brings out fully two thousand of our most intelligent people to hear him. All three lectures were grand efforts, all so logical and based upon immutable historical data that they carry conviction to the most obstinate mind. Mr. Blodgett says he will hav Mr. Watts here at least twice a year. He pays all bills and givs the lectures free—so generous is he.

We hav five dailies in this city, all of which devoted much space to reporting the meetings and synopsis of the lectures. The following, clipped from the Eagle, an evening paper, of the 23d inst., is a sample of the universal expression of all the papers:

Power's Opera House was well filled yesterday morning, and literally packed in the evening, with listeners eager to learn what Mr. Charles Watts had to say about the origin and teachings of the Bible, and about the nature and services to humanity of "unbelief." The audiences in point of intelligence and culture would bear comparison creditably with those in attendance at the churches, and the better classes of entertainments. A very large proportion were ladies.

Mr. Watts is not an Ingersoll in his style of oratory. He has not the same vein of satire, not the same aptness at humor. His appeals are not destitute of fine irony, of vigorous sarcasm, of logical wit; but his strong point is in appealing to the intellect, to the judgment, the common sense, and the reasoning powers of those whom he addresses. He does not seek to beat down others by the assumption that they are either fools or knaves, but labors to show wherein he thinks them wrongly educated and mistaken. He has a power of enlisting the minds of his auditors, and moving upon their feelings in such a way as to secure close attention to the end of an address of more than the average length of public lectures. This is attested by the unflagging interest shown by his large audiences yesterday and last evening.

Last evening after the close of the lecture a pleasant reception was held at the parlors of Sweet's Hotel under the auspices of Mr. D. A. Blodgett, at which about one hundred ladies and gentlemen of the best society were present and made the personal acquaintance of the speaker, Mr. Watts. It was rendered a very enjoyable social gathering, and all who called were delighted with the heartiness and geniality of the entertainment.

J. M. JAMIESON.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 24, 1885.

Jo Cook's Temper.

Jo Cook is still alive, and much himself. He has been down in Maine, and the Bangor Commercial thus reports his temper:

It appears that a certain prominent city official, whose brother was a classmate of Cook's, conceived in his hospitable spirit that it would be quite appropriate and polite to call on the lecturer and treat him to a drive about the city, with visits to various places of interest, etc. Accordingly the gentleman from the City Hall called upon Mr. Cook at the latter's rooms at the Bangor House and extended his invitation. To his great amazement, the lecturer, instead of receiving him courteously, glowered like a thunder-cloud, and stormed out: "I don't want anything to do with the people of Bangor; I want none of their attentions and don't want to see them!" or words to that effect; then, pacing the room like a caged tiger, he added that Bangor was a by-word and a hissing from one end of the continent to the other, saying that Neal Dow, Cyrus Hamlin, and Rev. Dr. Spear had assured him that such was the fact. The city official coolly asked the ferocious seeker after truth where he obtained such notions of Bangor, and was simply answered that it was all true enough, and that Messrs. Dow, Hamlin, and Spear furnished the information on which he based his convictions. Then the Bangor man ventured to correct Mr. Cook's erroneous impressions, whereupon that individual became fairly frantic with rage and ordered his visitor out of the room, threatening to use force if he did not go immediately. The well-meaning visitor was taken completely aback at this, and was actually in fear of bodily harm. He retired from the irate theologian's presence, however, in good order. These are the facts in the case, substantially and briefly, and they will convey a fairly correct idea of the deep, religious fervor which characterized Mr. Cook's final lecture here. It is a question, after all, whether the people of Bangor should take the slanders quoted above much to heart, because of the nature of their origin and the character of their circulating medium. The people of this and other states who are acquainted with Neal Dow, of unsavory reputation in connection with the indorsement of ex-State Treasurer Peck's bond and ill-success in the prosecution of fanatical measures; with the Rev. Dr. Spear, who, on account of his wild fanaticism, was forced to seek fields more congenial than the First Congregational church here, or with the pre-Adamite litterateur Cyrus Hamlin, will understand the low source of the slurs flung out by the theological mendicant, Joseph Cook. But for the benefit of those who do not know these men it should be said that Lecturer Cook's mental machinery is apparently drifting back to its one-time state of aberration, and hence he is liable to circulate statements even more absurd and false than he would if perfectly rational. It is certainly a diseased or a basely prejudiced mind that can see decency and consistency in accepting the half-dollars of a well-read, well-behaved, and progressiv community, and denouncing them in advance as unfit to associate with.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged,	$1,480.72
Alexander Cochran (paid),	5.00
G. W. Collins (paid),	1.00
A. B. Genung (paid),	1.00
G. W. Gorum (paid),	1.00
A. Pionnie, (paid),	1.00
George Cort (paid),	1.00
Alexander Jarvis (paid),	1.00
Newark Liberal League, per A. Pionnie,	2.00
Josephine Daune (paid),	1.00
J. B. Thompson,	1.00
Total,	1,495.72

Opening of the Museums.—The Tiger's Claws.

The ecclesiastical power is very agreeable on the outside so long as it thinks but little can be accomplished against it, but when it sees the near triumph of some secular principle and the loss of opportunity for itself, then it begins to show its nature for a fight, and the claws appear. The signs are that the museums will be open on Sunday, if the power of public opinion can prevail against the wealth of a few bigoted ecclesiastics, whose gifts are like that of the Trojan horse—they bear destruction in their way. The moment the church sees this appearance of a victory for Liberal ideas then it puts forth the hand of persecution. One man has already lost his situation as a workman because he was generous enough to take the trouble to secure the names of his fellow-workmen on the petition. This is a specimen of the freedom that Christianity allows. It makes one's blood boil to think that at the present day this tyranny should still exist, and be able to strike down the honest thinker. Does not this show what the church would do if it had the power? Would it allow anything that seemed in opposition to it to be established? Would it not use the sword if it could to enforce its demands? The Independent says that the workingmen do not want the museums open on Sunday. The signatures already received to the petition show that they do. But I would like to ask the Independent how we can hav any honest expression of the desires of the working people when if they undertake to do so they are threatened with a loss of situation. Before the Independent insists upon its claim, let it see to it as a fair-minded journal that the conditions are made for the full voice of the people in this matter. Let it first of all put aside the hand of the despot; let there be no persecution and no fear in the minds of those that vote, and then let us see what the people really desire. Are the Christian churches afraid of the voice of the workingmen that they thus put on the thumbscrew, and virtually forbid the expression of their desires in this matter? The point made by the Independent is utterly weak so long as this suppression of what one's wishes are is a part of the method of the church.

The Independent has been a stanch advocate of free speech, free press, and a free vote. Let it look at home; let it look at the Christians' tactics here in New York city, and do a little missionary work among its own friends. A free country this, is it, where a man is thrown out of employment simply for circulating a petition to open the museums on Sunday? The Independent puts on the workingman's mouth a gag, and then lustily shouts, "The workingmen don't want the museums open on Sunday, because they don't say they do." How can they, with this threat held over them? There has been, and can be, no fair trial in this matter until all threats are removed, and without fear or favor all the workingmen can express their opinion. There will not be much doubt of the result then.

The church professes to be the friend of the workingman. What more precious gift can it offer than that of liberty, the liberty to fully express his opinion upon every subject? The church in this case, however, has fully allied itself with slavery.

We want a Sunday for the people, but the church has already put its iron hand upon the proposition, and says no. Amid all the flowers of its rhetoric, it still carries the weapon of the tyrant. Whom the gods wish to destroy, they first make mad. The signs of destruction are manifest in the ecclesiastical powers of to-day. They appeal to the methods of the savage in the midst of civilization. It is an omen of death.

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD.

Our activ and splendid worker, E. A. Stevens, givs us some glimpses of the interesting labor that he is doing, whenever he can, for the Secular Union. The field demands his constant service:

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., Dec. 2, 1885.

MY DEAR PUTNAM: I hav been on the wing incessantly, except the last week, since the Congress. On Sunday, Nov. 8th, I had a most enjoyable visit with the Children's Lyceum at Cleveland, of which, under Thomas and Miss Lees's leadership there is certainly no mismanagement, and it well deserves the wide reputation it has obtained. Reared in a British barracks, and while yet a stripling trained as a military martinet, I could thoroughly enter into the spirit of their maneuvers and must pronounce the calisthenic performance the best I hav ever seen, except by professionals.

The same afternoon I occupied the rostrum at the Secular Union, and told what we don't know about God, having for my chief antagonist in debate the erratic individual who, at the Congress, opposed the law of gravitation, and was so anxious to confound Colonel Ingersoll with his "profound mystery." He succeeded in getting very angry. The next Sunday I listened to Mr. V. B. St. Clair's splendid paper giving personal reminiscences of that greatest of Britain's sons, Charles Bradlaugh.

My stay in Cleveland was made delightful, from a social point of view, by Mr. and Mrs. Lucas and Mr. and Mrs. Mallonee. You hav undoubtedly seen more of the Secular Age than I hav, having seen but one copy, but that initial number was a delightful surprise—that such a well edited and worthy paper can be published by Liberals in almost the center of our great continent. My experience in such ventures is not the most encouraging, but I do hope that our brother Mallonee will be sustained, and keep on with a succession of such surprises.

I arrived in Chicago just in time to hear our new secretary, Mrs. Ella LePage (Mrs. Freeman's daughter), lecture on woman's rights, and a splendid lecture she gave. The influence of heredity is clearly demonstrated in her case.

Sunday last we had Charles Watts in Chicago, and his lecture will hav a marked influence upon the Secular movement of that city. I hav not time to write you an adequate account of those lectures, but suppose you hav been fully apprised of them by this. E. A. STEVENS.

The following letter from our pioneer worker in Utah, Robert Wilson, will be read with great interest by all Liberals throughout the country, and will show what a valuable work Wm. Reynolds has started in behalf of the American Secular Union in the great West. We need a few more such men:

OGDEN, UTAH, Nov. 21, 285.

WM. REYNOLDS, ESQ., Dear Friend: Having arrived at home, after an absence of seven weeks, and knowing you would be glad to hear from me as soon as possible results of our propaganda work, first, I will say, on my arrival home I found things more favorable than I expected, but it did seem for a time, at least, that everything was working against me in taking this missionary or flying trip through this territory, and I think if there was a spark of superstition within my being it would certainly hav brought it out; but being a firm adherent to the Positiv sciences, thus you will readily see that I am wholly governed by cause and effect; and as we find that the darkest cloud has a bright side to it, a cause may bring about a better condition. I presume friend Veile gave you an account of our doings down in his part of the territory. I will simply state here that we had four public meetings in Fillmore, one in Kanosh, one in Petersburg, and three in Scipio, to good and attentiv audiences. In Scipio they wanted me to giv them another lecture, but there came on such a severe storm that we had to giv it up. There are several noble men and women in that settlement, and particularly in Fillmore. Space will not permit me to name all who are firm to our cause. I feel compelled, though, to mention friends Robinson, Kelly, and L. Christenson, and if I was religiously inclined I would say you were considerably inspired in choosing friend Veile for one of the executiv committee. He is a trump in reference to subscribers for our literature. Money is very scarce, and being a long way from the railroad, it seems almost impossible for farmers to cash their grain, otherwise I think we would hav had several subscribers for our papers, etc.

Nevertheless, we created quite an agitation among the people, and caused several of them to realize that it was high time for them to think and reason for themselvs. Samuel Rowley, at Scipio, who is a firm Freethinker, hitched up his team and drove over with me to Juab, a distance of twenty-four miles. It was storming at the time. We had a very cold trip of it. I boarded the train at Juab, came on to Nephi. This is one of the most priest-ridden and hidebound places in that part of the territory, but I was determined to lecture there, come what would. Friends Larson and Berndt did all they could in reason to make it a success. We hired the court house for one night. I set to work and marked off some bills stating the subject off lecture. By this means the town was duly notified. We had a good and attentiv audience, and several of the audience requested me to giv them another lecture, which I did the night following, and I think we drove a wedge in that hidebound place that they will never be able to get rid of. After having considerable argument with some of their would-be smart men, I answered their arguments, which is easy enough to do. I will say here in this flying trip of ours I hav never found one of them who would accept a challenge to discuss either in public or private the tenets of their faith or creed. It seems that all they can say is that I am a dangerous man, and they advised the people not to come and listen to me. They came, though, for all that, because we giv the people food for thought. There is quite an agitation, and a disposition among the people for inquiry, and if a good speaker and a man acquainted with their systems could be kept in the field, with a fair salary, so that he could be somewhat independent, I would hav no fears for our cause in this territory. They would flock to our standard by the hundreds. I hav said enough on this subject, or my letter will be too long. I left Nephi the next day by train for Payson. The depot is about two miles distant from the town of Payson. I got aboard the hack, which brought me to Dr Greer's residence, who is a stanch Infidel, and you can imagin how well I was received by the doctor and his noble spouse. I cannot speak too well of them.

While the doctor and myself were talking matters over, who should drop in but the veritable H. S. Brooks himself? How well it makes one feel when we meet and associate with such men, men who are true to themselvs and stand on their own individuality. Friend Reynolds, if you are not personally acquainted with friend Brooks, I would like you to be, for he is a stanch adherent of our cause, and a man that is capable of doing much good, and certainly the right man in the right place, as one of the executiv committee. There is also Charles Long and several others I could mention who are firm to our cause living in Payson and its neighborhood. Friend Brooks and others soon made arrangements for me to lecture in the Opera House at Payson. They went to work and hired the Opera House for two nights. They thought it would be best for us to go to Goshen, a town some fifteen miles from Payson, and giv them a lecture first. By that means it was considered Payson would be better advertised, as we wanted to create as much agitation in Payson as possible, it being the leading town in that part of the territory. Friend White, of Goshen, treated us grandly, and I lectured in the school-house at Goshen in the evening to a very attentiv audience, and some of the audience told me that it was the largest gathering of the people they had seen in that school-house for some time past; and on the 12th and 13th inst., as per announcement, I lectured in the Opera House at Payson to a large and appreciativ audience, and I do not know when I ever felt better than I did when addressing that audience. It seemed to me that they were sick of their old musty creeds and dogmas of the past, and were hungry for something more tangible, something that would benefit them here in this life. A good many of the audience wanted us to hold forth again on the 14th inst.; our engagements ahead would not allow it. On the 14th inst. we held forth in the school-house at Bengeman, a small town some four miles from Payson, to an attentiv audience.

The next day friend Brooks got a team and spring wagon from Brother Hone, at Bengeman, and we drove over to Springville—about eighteen miles from Payson. It is quite a large settlement, close on three thousand inhabitants. We stopped with friend Gallup, who is firm to our cause. We visited friends Packard, Dougall, Huntingdon, and others who are solid. We tried to get a place to lecture in. Failing in that, and the theater not being completed, Mr. Packard, being the principal owner, informed us it would be completed in about two weeks, and, all things considered, they thought it would be better for me to come down some time this winter and giv them a course of lectures in the theater. Thus it would giv our cause a good start. Here I parted with my companion and friend, H. S. Brooks, and, I can assure you, I felt like parting with an old and tried friend, and not with a man that I had only known about eight or ten days. I boarded the train for Lehi. Met friends Dawson, Goody, and Dr. Wadsworth. Next day we made arrangements and hired the Music Hall, which is the largest hall in Lehi. I set to and printed a lot of large posters, and we soon had the town well informed as to our lecture. I was surprised to see so many come. All the Mormon dignitaries of the place were there. The next day there was an excitement in the town. Our friends say it was the best thing they ever had for that town to break down superstition, and they feel satisfied that much good will spring out of it. The following day I took train for Salt Lake City, and being very anxious to see my sick folks, I came by the evening train to Ogden, and having a slight cold on the chest, I thought that two or three days' rest would do me good. Hence I did not go and see friend Ashman and others in Salt Lake City this time; and if they can make arrangements for me to lecture there, I can go on short notice.

Friend Reynolds, I hav given you a brief account of my missionary trip through southern Utah, and I do think considerable good will grow out of it, and it will cause hundreds in that dark, priest-ridden country to begin to think for themselvs. The people are poor in cash down there, but a great many of them are large in heart. Next, there are quite a number that hav promised to subscribe for our papers as soon as they can raise the money, and it seems to me that the Liberal papers will hav a good deal to do with our success in Utah. The fires are started now, and they should be kept burning.

The Newark Liberal League is still progressing. I lectured there on Sunday afternoon on the American Secular Union and its work. The members of this League are in hearty co-operation with the plans of the Union, and believe that we are on the right basis for an advance movement. They hav lectures every Sunday afternoon. E. W. Chamberlain lectures next Sunday afternoon on "Prison Reform," and a week from Sunday Mr. Wakeman speaks his word.

REYNOLDS'S ILLUSTRATED LECTURE.

I was quite delighted with C. B. Reynolds's lecture on Palestine before the Liberal Club. The illustrations are very fine, and giv a very vivid idea of the country and the people. These illustrated lectures are a novelty, aud are admirably adapted for the work of advancing Freethought. They will attract all classes, will interest both old and young, and will do much to remove false ideas in regard to history and the meaning of the Bible. I hope that Liberals everywhere will make arrangements for a course of these lectures. It will be a source of pleasure to themselvs and profit to the cause, and will enable Mr. Reynolds to do a much-needed work for Liberalism. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Life of Elizur Wright.

"Templeton," in the Boston Herald, Nov. 24, 1885.

The late Elizur Wright, who died Saturday afternoon at his home in Medford, was not only a man of rare originality and thinking and peculiar traits of character, but he had a singular life experience, only the outlines of which hav been given in the obituaries which hav thus far been printed in the press. In conversation at one time with him, he gave me a history of his life, which so interested me that I at once made a minute of what he said, which I hav here written out for publication in the Herald. Mr. Wright is the last of the prominent Abolitionists who cast their lot in Boston. But the career he had was not altogether identified with the cause of Antislavery. He was a man of varied intellectual attainmants. He was a theologian, a scholar, a philosopher, a journalist, and a mathematician during his lifetime, and his talents in this last field finally brought him a fortune, though not until he had had a severe struggle with poverty for almost half a century.

Elizur Wright was born in South Canaan, Conn., in February, 1804. He descended from three Elizur Wrights in direct line before him, the most remote of these ancestors being a deacon of a church in Springfield, Mass. They were all pious men. The mother of Mr. Wright came from a line of mariners, who belonged to New York city. She went to Connecticut to teach school, where she became the second wife of the father of the subject of this sketch. She also was a religious woman, but less decidedly so than her husband. Elizur was put early to learn his catechism, but he remembered questioning its doctrins before he was six years of age. He would not acccept its view of hell, and took exception to other tenets. When he was six years old his father decided to remove to the West. Daniel Bacon, a missionary of that section, and father of Dr. Leonard Bacon, now of New Haven, persuaded him to settle in Tallmage, near Akron, in Ohio. The family started in 1810, with its members in a carriage drawn by a span of horses, and with two ox-wagons, each drawn by two yokes of oxen, to transport all its effects across the Alleghany mountains. They were thirty-nine days in making the journey. They found the place a wilderness when they reached it, but settlers came in and it was rapidly cleared.

The elder Wright was a graduate of Yale college, and was both a farmer and a mechanical engineer. He established an academy for the youth of the place, and one of his daughters taught a school, which Elizur Wright and Leonard Bacon attended together. Elizur afterward studied with his father, who fitted him for college, and especially trained him in mathematics. When he was seventeen years old a great revival of religion took place. His father was much interested, his mother less so. The lad was still disposed to dispute the prevailing theology, and kept clear of the revival meetings. One day, when he was at work on the farm cutting corn with a sickle, his father came to him and asked him to go and hear the preacher, offering to take his place at labor. He went reluctantly, and was not impressed. But when he came back he found his father had cut himself badly with the sickle. The boy then said to himself: There may be something in this atonement by blood, after all. He still denied the vicarious feature, but he was touched by the analogy between his father's suffering a wound for him, and the savior's suffering for the race. He went again to the meetings, and came under the influence of their magnetism. When he presented himself for admission to the church, he still refused to believe in the historical Christianity, and was heretical on other points. The church deferred the decision as to admitting him, but at a second meeting agreed to his membership by a small majority—probably out of deference to his father's desires.

Mr. Wright's Antislavery ideas began to be implanted at this time. His father was strongly opposed to slavery, and the house was visited by bondmen fleeing toward Canada. His father determined to educate him for the ministry. In 1822 he sent Elizur to Yale college. The one hundred dollars with which he had proposed to equip him was diverted to the minister, who needed it for a wedding outfit, and Elizur set out with only six dollars in his pocket. He was provided with a horse, and a lad named Sturtevant (now President Sturtevant of Jacksonville, Ill., college) furnished the carriage. They took in two other boys with them, who were coming East. The road was bad, and the horse could only carry two at a time. So they arranged to "ride and tie," as it was called. Two rode a distance and tied the horse, starting on ahead, while the others came up on foot until they reached it, and drove on in their turn. They traveled five hundred miles and more in this way. When young Wright reached New Haven he had two dollars and twelve cents left, and he sold his horse, which had become sick, for twenty-five dollars.

He was very poor in college, but paid his way by teaching school, with some assistance from home. He wore clothes spun by his mother, and made up awkwardly by a woman tailor. There was one hundred scholars in the class—many of them Southerners. These were generally well supplied with money. It had been the fashion for each boy to giv fifty cents toward providing bats and oars for athletic sports. Henry Laurens, of South Carolina, proposed that this sum should be increased to a dollar. In the meeting held to consider the subject young Wright objected that such an amount was not necessary, and could not be afforded. Laurens answered him by ridiculing his clothes, and calling him a nondescript from Ohio. Wright retorted that his mother spun and wove them, and that they should not be insulted, and said that all the clothes Laurens's people had had descended to them from their ancestors, whereat the boys cheered lustily. Two grandsons, respectivly, of General Putnam and Seabury Ford, a future governor of Ohio (all Ohio students), backed him up. He carried his point. On going back to his room, he found Laurens there before him, and bullying his roommate. Wright asked him if he had been invited there. Laurens said no, but he intended to stay, upon which Wright collared him and pitched him headlong into the entry. Considerable bad feeling was afterward awakened between the Southerners and Westerners. The former put torpedoes against the doors of the Western students and blew them in and blew the windows out; but one of the Putnams lay in wait, and detected a student doing this, when he shot him with a gun loaded with salt, and the Southerners were never afterward seen in college. This ended the persecutions.

Mr. Wright was graduated in 1826. When he took his degree, the Rev. John Todd, who was then in his Groton (Mass.) settlement, was in New Haven in search of a person to teach the Groton Academy. Professor Phipps seems to hav attached small importance to Mr. Wright's tendency to heresy, and recommended him for the place. Mr. Wright was in full agreement with Horace Bushnell at that time, who was in college with him. But he proved far from being orthodox enough for Dr. Todd. Mr. Wright offended him by attending a Unitarian ordination in the town. The doctor labored with him, and urged him to read commentaries upon the scriptures. This study Mr. Wright pursued so closely for two years as to affect his health. He remembered riding up from Boston at that period in the stage with a singular, spare-looking man, who talked with such intensity as to leave the impression that he would not liv long. He got out of the stage at Concord to attend to a house he was building there. It was Ralph Waldo Emerson. Mr. Wright was warmly interested in the temperance reform at this time. He found his wife in one of his scholars here.

Chiefly on account of his health he left Groton and obtained work as an agent of the Tract society under Arthur Tappan. He rode 1,400 miles in and about Pennsylvania, and had great success as a lecturer and missionary. His father wanted him licensed as a preacher, but the presbytery dodged the subject because of his heresies of belief. He was married that year—1829. He had two calls—to a tutorship in Yale and a professorship of mathematics in Western Reserve College, which his father had done much to establish. He accepted the latter at $400 per year, and lived on this for four years, with some aid from his parents, notwithstanding children were born to him. Here he read Garrison's Liberator constantly, and began to feel that colonization, which most Abolitionists had believed in, was wrong. He attacked colonization in the Hudson Observer, the local paper. Six hundred of its subscribers signed a paper threatening to withdraw their patronage if the articles were not stopped. A brother of Ben Wade wrote up from Cleveland offering to make the place of every one of them good. The feeling among the colonizationists against the new school of Abolitionists was intense at that time. Mr. Wright went to Groton on a visit, and from there repaired to Boston, where the Colonization Society was in session. He was challenged to a discussion with Professor Finney, which was held for two days in Park Street church. At its close the proprietors voted not to allow either side to be heard in the church in the future. Mr. Wright gave a course of lectures on geology also, which offended the religious people by their free dealing with the text of scripture. He was ready to leave when Arthur and Lewis Tappan invited him to go to New York and edit the Emancipator.

He went to New York in 1834, and was chosen secretary of the American Antislavery Society, soon after formed in Philadelphia. He also edited a paper called Human Rights, also published in New York. This was the season of mobs for Antislavery men. Mr. Wright never boasted of physical courage. He said he should probably hav acted as did John Brown, had he possessed it in equal degree. But he was determined not to giv way an inch before the mobs. When they threatened his house in Brooklyn, William Goodell asked him what he should do. Pointing to an ax, he said he should lock the door, and the first man that should come through it would hav his skull split. The mayor of the city asked him to leave for Jamaica till the storm was over. He said if the city wouldn't protect him he would protect himself, but he would not stir. He was not disturbed, but constantly slept with his house barricaded and with people prowling about it. A pilot boat from South Carolina was anchored in the harbor three weeks, its owners intending to kidnap him and Mr. Tappan and carry them privately to South Carolina. They were warned, knew the crew and saw them often, but never were taken off their guard. Once he attended a pro-slavery meeting, was identified there, and, though he effected a retreat, was followed through the streets, and protected from bowie knives at last by some teamsters whom he knew. The bravest and most efficient service in protecting free discussion in those days in New York, Mr. Wright says, was rendered by William Leggett, of the Evening Post, and Charles King, of the New York American. Their names ought always to be remembered with honor. Mr. Leggett was finally driven from the Post. Mr. Bryant had the disposition to protect him, but did not dare run the risk. He would probably hav sacrificed himself without aiding his partner. Tammany Hall wanted to send Mr. Leggett to Congress afterward, but his Antislavery record prevented.

In 1838 there was a division among the Antislavery men on the subject of political action. Mr. Wright believed in organizing a party and in voting. He was prevailed upon by Henry B. Stanton and others to come to Boston and edit an Antislavery paper called the Massachusetts Abolitionist. He worked hard here, but there was not capital enough behind the movement. His salary was to hav been $1,500. At the end of the year only half of it had been paid. He felt obliged to resign his position, for he had now six children depending upon his efforts. He was then without money. His father had died, but he had brothers who were well-to-do in Ohio who offered him a home. He decided to stay where he was and run the risk of starving. He came as near want as his worst forebodings had brought him to dread. In moments of leisure, he had undertaken to translate La Fontaine's "Fables," to entertain his own children. He determined to publish an elegant edition of this book. For this purpose he made arrangements to import a lot of Granville's (French) illustrations. His brother-in-law was to aid him pecuniarily. But before the plates arrived this brother-in-law had failed, and payment came back upon Mr. Wright. He had literally nothing with which to meet it. But the book was printed, and by a desperate effort he got the edition bound, in part with the plates. It did not sell, and his heart fairly failed him. In this emergency his wife determined to try her luck as a canvasser. Leaving an absolutely destitute family at home, Mr. Wright himself taking the whole charge of the children and the household, doing all the cooking, and even the washing and ironing of the family, she tried her persuasivness among some of the rich people of Boston. In a week she sold twenty copies, for which she brought home $200. (It was an edition de luxe for those days, remember.) This gave them new heart. The next week Mr. Wright started out, in his turn. For the next two years he canvassed for this and other books, at last going as far as England. He did not end till he had sold the whole edition of one thousand copies of "La Fontaine." During this time the Lawrence brothers (Abbot and Amos), whom he had known at Groton, aided him by introducing him to their friends, and lending him small sums of money, which were fully repaid after several years with interest. When he took his book to Washington he carried from Abbot Lawrence a letter to William C. Preston, of South Carolina. He spent an evening with this senator, who appeared much interested in him. They talked of literature principally. At last Mr. Preston said: "What were you doing, Mr. Wright, during all the years that preceded your literary labors?" "Fighting your peculiar institution," was the blunt reply. Mrs. Preston, who was present, turned pale as ashes; but the senator was not discomposed, and urged Mr. Wright to go South in order to get a more correct idea of the state of slavery.

This period of Mr. Wright's life, with the years that immediately followed, was a severe struggle with poverty. Children came into his family with almost every year. There was not money enough to pay servants, and he learned to do every kind of housework. About every moment that he could spare, when at home, from brain labor, was spent in aiding an equally overtasked wife. He wrote for the Emancipator and the Chronicle, and edited the Chainbreaker, started to resist the annexation of Texas, and earned a dollar or two by his pen whenever he had an opportunity. It was a hand-to-mouth fight. When this was at its worst, and he had about a dozen of children to feed, he conceived the audacious idea of starting a daily paper without capital. A broker, who was his friend, gave him a corner of his room for an office. He bought just one ream of paper, took it on his own shoulder, with his "copy" in his pocket, and started for the printers, whom he instructed to print as large an edition of the Chronotype (the name he gave his new venture) as the paper would admit of. He wrote the whole of the first number and of many others that followed himself. It was not an exclusivly Antislavery sheet. It was rather a precursor of the Bohemian journalism that came later, with the immorality left out. It was bright, witty, unconventional, and a little reckless, discussing a great variety of topics, but never forgetting Antislavery and temperance. It was a success, but so modestly did its editor estimate his own services that when some business men took hold of the paper, in a year or two, with him, he was willing to work for $10 per week. The paper had four thousand circulation at this time. The California fever had such an effect in 1849 that it was thought best to suspend its publication, but it started again and became more prosperous than ever. At this time Henry Wilson was determined to own a Free Soil daily organ in Massachusetts. There were in existence the Boston Daily Whig, afterward the Republican (once edited by Charles Francis Adams), and the Chronotype of Mr. Wright. General Wilson's plan was to unite these in a new paper to be called the Commonwealth. The Chronotype had at this time seven thousand circulation. Wilson offered Wright $5,000 for his paper, $2,500 in cash, and $2,500 in stock in the new enterprise, with a position on the latter at $20 per week. It was accepted. The $2,500 cash paid the Chronotype's debts. The other half was Mr. Wright's remaining capital. But unfortunately General Wilson had everything to learn about journalism. He put the Rev. John G. Palfrey in as editor, and in two weeks the paper had lost three thousand subscribers. Before Mr. Wright could sell his stock it was worth nothing. He continued to work on the paper for two years, but he grew poorer again, and it became less and less profitable.

Up to this time Mr. Wright had demonstrated an extraordinary capacity and remarkable versatility of talent. He had been successivly teacher, missionary, almost a preacher in the ministry, a college professor, an antislavery writer and speaker, a translator of French literature, and a really brilliant journalist. He had done everything but learn the art of utilizing for money purposes his rare talent. Few men needed money more. His family went on increasing. He had been the father of eighteen children, nearly all born before this time, and he had probably never been in receipt of $1,500 in any one year. The tide was about to turn, though some years were yet to elapse before pecuniary prosperity was really to visit him.

In 1852 the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company was started in Boston. Its directors applied to Mr. J. Ingersoll Bowditch to prepare mathematical tables for its use. Mr. Bowditch remembered that his distinguished father, Dr. Nathaniel Bowditch, had entertained a high opinion of Mr. Wright's mathematical talent, and he recommended Mr. Wright to the company. They engaged him, and he left figures of speech for figures of arithmetic. He made and printed tables for them, for which he received (about a year's labor) $5,500. This was indeed a change, though there was considerable expense to be deducted from the gross sum. He continued to make tables and do other work in kind up to 1858. Then, having long seen the need of reform in insurance management, he set about procuring a law to be passed for the supervision of the companies. He drew up a bill and carried it to the State House. He had no influence, and could not get for the subject attention. The last day of the session was reached. The members of the Senate were having a mock session. One of them—a silent member—had asked nothing through the whole winter and spring. In rallying him for his reticence, his brother members pledged themselvs to adopt any measure he might now ask for. "Pass Wright's bill, then," said he. They did pass it instantly. Mr. Wright was present, and saw his opportunity. He followed the bill down to the House of Representativs, where his old college classmate, Julius Rockwell (once United States senator and since a judge), was in the chair as speaker. The speaker put it through quickly, the governor signed it, and, to the surprise of everybody, it became a law.

Governor Banks had his favorit all ready for appointment as commissioner under it. But that gentleman, after reading the law, told him that he had not the capacity to execute it, and, further, that he did not believe anybody else in the state had except Mr. Wright. There was no alternativ but to giv Mr. Wright the appointment then. He took it at a salary of $1,500, with permission to make figures in leisure time for outside parties. He held the office eight years, but its labors were so onerous that he had little time for other work. His independence and honesty made him enemies, and at last they succeeded in reorganizing the system and legislating him out of office. He had lived in comparativ comfort, financially, from his insurance connection up to the present time. Now began a season of real prosperity. He invented a revolving arithmetic, which was of great aid in facilitating long arithmetical calculations, and his services became widely sought. The first year after he left the state's service his income was $12,000. His aggressiv habits were still upon him. He insisted upon reforming insurance practices. Some of the men engaged in these appear to hav dreaded his assaults as much as did the slaveholders in his early life. He was at one time offered an annuity of $10,000 to retire from activ service. This he indignantly declined.

The later career of Mr. Wright is familiar. He continued up to the time of his death to be earnestly interested in public affairs. He wrote often for the papers of Boston, the columns of any journal here being readily open to him. He was very sound on the currency question, was a pronounced free trader, and an ardent woman suffragist. Upon the reconstruction question in its relation to the South he early accepted Liberal views. No man labored more earnestly or made more sacrifices for the slave while slavery was triumphant in the land. But in 1868 Mr. Wright personally visited the South, and he repeated the visit several times later. He came home in the first instance convinced that there was nothing to fear from the remaining spirit of the rebellion, and each visit afterward made confirmed this view. The negro he believed to be no longer in danger, but he held that what the nation most needed was reunion and reconciliation between the sections. He pleaded for the subdued and impoverished slave master in the same spirit that he formerly pleaded for the slave. From an abolitionist of so extended a record this testimony was important. The wife, who was the companion for so many years of Mr. Wright's struggle against adverse fortune, and of whom he was wont to declare with much feeling that she was as good a woman as God ever gave to earth, was permitted to enjoy only a portion of his prosperity. She died from the effects of an accident. Of his children six survive.

THE FUNERAL.

From the Investigator.

Mourners gathered at the late residence of Elizur Wright, in Medford, on Wednesday, to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed friend, so well known for many years. The severe storm detained many, but yet there were in the parlors a large delegation from Boston and other places, among the number being Judge Sewell, Judge White, of New York, Dr. H. I. Bowditch, William I. Bowditch, Horace Seaver, who, with Jas. Harris and J. A. O'Malley, represented as delegates the Ingersoll Secular Society; Theodore Weld, Hon. F. W. Bird, Frank Garrison, James B. Richards, of New York, Lewis Prang, Carl Heinzen. There were numerous elegant floral decorations sent by relativs and friends, the Ingersoll Society offering an ivy wreath and a sheaf of wheat. The exercises consisted of addresses delivered by personal friends of the departed.

Horace Seaver made an eloquent address.

Mr. Theodore D. Weld, an old antislavery friend of Mr. Wright, gave a very interesting address on the history of Mr. Wright, detailing his public career, his home life, and his literary labors. Mr. Weld gave many anecdotes of Mr. Wright's antislavery career, and described him as a very excellent man—decided, positiv, and independent—who could not be swerved from what he thought was right. Mr. Wright, he also said, was the best English writer of the day.

Hon. Frank W. Bird, an old friend of Mr. Wright, spoke very highly of the moral character of the deceased, and eulogized him as a public benefactor.

A letter from John G. Whittier was read, in which the poet spoke very highly of Mr. Wright as an old friend, and declared that he himself would certainly hav come to the funeral had not age and ill-health prevented.

At the close of the exercises the body was taken to Mount Hope Cemetery, where it was interred without further ceremony.

RESOLUTIONS.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: At a meeting of the Pittsburgh Secular Society on Sunday, Nov. 29th, the following action was taken on the death of the Hon. Elizur Wright:

The Secular Society of Pittsburgh desires to record its appreciation of his noble services to humanity and its grateful tribute to his memory: therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of the Hon. Elizur Wright the country has lost one of its best citizens, Humanity a valiant soldier, and Liberalism a true and tried friend. His bereaved family has our heartfelt sympathy in its affliction.

ROMAN STALEY, President.
HARRY HOOVER, Secretary.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 30, 285.

Illustrated Liberal Lectures.

Since the Cleveland Congress, after safely housing the Tent, I hav been in New York, so as to take advantage of the great libraries for reference and verification of data, in the preparation of Illustrated Liberal Lectures, which I am now prepared to giv, using the magnificent stereopticon and views procured by the late D. M. Bennett on his memorable tour round the world.

The pictures are really superb, and everything pertaining to the stereopticon the very best obtainable. The lectures hav been very carefully prepared, with especial design to awake thought.

The afternoon matinees, at the very lowest rates of admission, will generally pay the entire expenses, leaving the evening receipts for the Leagues and societies getting up the entertainments.

Surely the time has come when efforts should be made to win honest-hearted Christians from their reverence of error and superstition, that they may unite with us in efforts to secure the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

I desire to make up route, so as to avoid needless travel and expense, and shall be pleased to forward terms and full particulars to all who desire to avail themselvs of this opportunity to popularize Liberalism in their neighborhood.

Address, care of THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton place, New York. C. B. REYNOLDS.

Only Sleeping.

The following clipping, from the Missouri Republican of Nov. 12th, shows that the spirit of the Inquisition is not dead, but only sleeping:

THE WATCHMAN'S CLUB.

Father Phelan is unusually severe on his Protestant colaborers in the Christian cause this week, as will be seen from the following editorial paragraph in the Western Watchman:

"The Central Baptist assures us that Mr. Currey's knowledge of Catholicism 'is thorough and exhaustiv.' This is the first time we ever heard of a Baptist knowing much about anything.

"Hypocrits, blasphemers, and drunkards often put themselvs in our way, and we must bear with them. A preacher is a lawless villifier of God and God's church. When Lucifer harangued the angels, he preached the first Protestant sermon. The first man who opened his mouth against the church of God deserved death. Those who preach against her in our day can claim in extenuation that they know not the heinousness of their crime. But crime it is, and materially its magnitude is not lessened."

This Father Phelan, editor of the Catholic organ above mentioned, is the same editor of the same paper that sought to vilify the memory of the great Victor Hugo by such misrepresentations of his last hours as only a Catholic journal could be guilty of. "He lived without a principle, and died without a prayer," is the verbatim rendering of one among several falsehoods which that priest and paper published concerning the dead Hugo. Oh, how sore the Romish church feels because that master genius snubbed the officious bishop of Paris, who endeavored to intrude his services (?) where they were neither wanted nor needed! True might it hav been said of that greatest citizen of republican France, "He lived alone by principle, and died without a priest." But Phelan and the Watchman are rarely betrayed into stating truth.

Can't you see the animus, the deep-rooted spirit of hate and intolerance, cropping out in the extract I send? "The first man who opened his mouth against the church of God deserved death." Of course the Catholic church—Phelan's church—is the "church of God;" and if the Catholics had power—if this same priest, Phelan, had power—the Inquisition would be revived to-day. It is certainly as much of a crime to steal or murder to-day as it was yesterday; and, from the Watchman's standpoint, the last man who speaks against the "church of God" commits as great a "crime" as the first, and deserves as great punishment. If this is not logical, show us the error.

Yes, while Protestantism is to be feared if clothed with too much authority, Catholic political power means certain death to all human liberty.

The sweeping denunciation contained in the clipping, while hurled at Protestantism in general and Baptists in particular, of course includes all Infidels and Liberals—all who speak "against the church of God." While not all priests of that faith are as indiscreet as Phelan, they all at heart hav the same thoughts, motivs, and intentions concerning those who even speak against that which Romanism pronounces holy. The sword, the rack, and the thumbscrew are rusting in the vaults of disuse only for the lack of power, not will, in the users. But once let them get the power, once let them gain state control as of old, and the oil of distilled hate will remove the rust, and these instruments of torture in the hands of God's faithful, warmed up and lighted by the fagot-flame of fiery persecution, will be as potent for human woe and degradation as when poor Bruno's noble heart was burned out of him for trying to lead the people out of the dark.

Now, Mr. Editor, I ask you (and I want you to append your answer to the foot of this letter)—I ask you, sir—do you not believe that Phelan's language voices the sentiments of every adult Catholic, layman, or priest in all this land? And if this is true, is not Roman Catholicism the master serpent, the very leviathan whose head is first to be crushed by Liberalism in her noble warfare on behalf of human liberty? Surely "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and Phelan and the Watchman need many watchmen among Liberals.

All honor to you, sir, and THE TRUTH SEEKER, for your well-aimed efforts against the "Freedom of Worship" bill. That is dead, and I hope your ready heel (or rather your handy "Faber") may continue to crush the corn on the pope's big toe.

Freeman, Mo, Nov. 15, E M. 285. T. M. HORNE.

CATALOG of the Truth Seeker Company's publications sent free upon application.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 12, 1885.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures next year, the subscription list must be lengthened. We will renew one old subscription for a year, and send THE TRUTH SEEKER to one new subscriber for a year, for $5. Will not every one, in renewing, try to get a new subscriber?

Christmas Books.

Those of our readers who are intending to celebrate the pagan sun festival, now called Christmas, by making presents to their friends should not forget that books are very appropriate gifts, and that we hav several different works that will fill the bill.

For the youngsters "The Story Hour," with its scores of fine illustrations, is just the thing. For the older children "Apples of Gold" and "All in a Lifetime" will prove acceptable presents. A good thing for Freethinkers to present to their Christian friends is a scientific or Freethought work which will set them to thinking. But perhaps the best of all works for the season, it being designed especially for a gift from friend to friend, is Ingersoll's "Prose Poems." It is magnificently printed and bound, and is a thing of real beauty as well as a joy to the Freethinking possessor. Another beautiful work is the complete works of Ingersoll, and still another is D. M. Bennett's "Around the World," in leather or morocco.

But send for a catalog and make a selection. We hav scores of works that are good.

The Museum Question.

The ministers of the city evidently feel that the Sunday opening question is assuming too large proportions for safety to the integrity of their congregations, and are casting an anchor to windward by advocating a Saturday half holiday for the workers. This, they say, will giv the people ample opportunity to visit the museums without violating the "holy Sabbath."

While we are as strongly in favor of the Saturday half holiday as any preacher of them all, we do not see how this can affect the justice of the demand for Sunday opening. As a matter of fact, a half holiday on Saturday would not afford the workers the opportunity of visiting the museums, for by the time the people reached home and changed their clothes, and then went to the park, it would be so near dark as to make the visit not worth while. But the question is not only one of opportunity, but of right. The people pay for the museums in large part, and they hav the moral right to visit them when they choose; and, judging by the alacrity with which the petitions are signed, Sunday is the day the working people choose. So, while we sympathize with the Saturday half holiday movement, we cannot allow it to be substituted for Sunday opening.

Last Sunday Branch Five of the Socialistic Labor Party, about two hundred and fifty voting, indorsed, with but three dissenting votes, the request to the museum trustees. The Central Labor Union of New York, which is the representativ of all the trades unions in the city, unanimously adopted a resolution indorsing the petition. Several local unions of the different trades hav also indorsed it.

The Housesmith Union also passed the following manly resolution:

"Resolved, That we, as citizens of the United States, demand that these museums be opened to the public on all Sundays in the year, so that we may the better educate ourselvs and our families."

The printers, numbering several thousands in this city, are heartily supporting it. About the only exception to this is a foreman in Martin B. Brown's printing establishment. His name is Myers, and he appears to be a religious bigot. A copy of the request was sent to the office, and Mr. A. J. Hanson, of 235 West Thirty-fifth street, circulated it among the compositors. He had obtained the names of nearly every man upon his floor, when he was called to the foreman's desk, and given notice to leave the employ of Mr. Brown. As Mr. Hanson had before this circulated lists among the printers without objection being made, he is naturally indignant at the outrage. He will bring his discharge before the Typographical Union, and that body will probably be able to force his reinstatement. As Martin B. Brown makes his money by doing the city printing, for which the people pay, and pay royally, it seems a particularly flagrant injustice that has been perpetrated upon Mr. Hanson.

Our subscribers in the city will aid this movement by using all possible expedition in getting the petition signed and returning them to Mr. Putnam, care of this office.

The Growing Disbelief in Miracles.

In the present age of more or less perfect science, whatever partakes of the supernatural in its character is at once "sat down upon," dismissed as unworthy of credence. Even the spirits which are said to return to earth must be natural—that is, material, though of an exceedingly subtil kind—or they can find no place in the philosophy of the day. The old-fashioned apparitions common to Christians in the days of literal devils and real witches are at present pooh-poohed, and laughed out of mind. Alleged occurrences must appeal to human reason, or they hav no standing in court. The age is practical, scientific, and materialistic.

Admitting this, and it is generally admitted even by churchmen, yet what an anomaly do we find! In this country there are some eighty-one thousand men trained to discourse weekly of the supernatural—that is, Christianity. They talk of divine truths, as if divinity were a reality, and propound dogmas based on a religion not developed by the wisdom of man, but asserted to be miraculously communicated to the human race. Yet these dogmas are all superhuman, or they are untenable. If the doctrins said to be revealed were of an ordinary character or naturally attainable, the claim that they were divinely revealed would be without the slightest support. Unless there was a supernatural revelation, and unless Christianity is that revelation, it has no reason for being, and has no claims above other theologies for belief.

Every land, almost, has its supernatural revelation. In this respect Christendom is but an imitator. Long before Christianity claimed its supernaturalism India had its divine revelation. Indian theologians claim that the whole of the Veda is the work of deity. Zoroaster and Mohammed claimed the same for their superstitions.

Professing, then, to be divinely revealed, or supernatural, Christianity must of necessity depend for proof upon supernatural evidence, for humanity can not of itself go outside of nature, and doctrins which depend for their truth upon the truth of the miraculous cannot come within the range of human intellect, and cannot, therefore, be proved by human intelligence. The miraculous must first be substantiated before the supernatural can be admitted. In other words, upon the truth of the miracles in the New Testament depends the whole system of Christianity. The testimony of the most eminent churchmen is that "in all points Christianity is emphatically a supernatural religion, claiming to be divine in its origin, superhuman in its essence, and miraculous in its evidence. It cannot be accepted without an absolute belief in miracles, and those who profess to hold the religion whilst they discredit its supernatural elements—and they are many at the present day—hav widely seceded from ecclesiastical Christianity."

A miracle, to be a miracle, must be a phenomenon for which human intelligence can in no wise account. The actual occurrence of the phenomenon must also be attested by evidence in which there is not one flaw, however slight. A miracle, then, is the most equivocal evidence that can be used, for as man can not comprehend the nature of the phenomenon, he must believe it solely upon the word of him who says he saw it. The story of the whale swallowing Jonah, says Paine, borders greatly upon the marvelous, but it would hav more nearly approached the idea of a miracle if Jonah had swallowed the whale. In this the matter decides itself by the query, Is it more probable that a man should hav swallowed a whale, or told a lie?

As with this, so with the other miracles upon which Christianity depends. They are incredible of themselvs, and are unsupported by any reliable evidence. Being occurrences outside and contrary to the operation and effect of natural law, they are incomprehensible, being supported by no known witnesses. There is no reason for trying to believe them. The minor alleged miracles of the Old Testament are but a low species of sleight-of-hand. The most stupendous of all miracles—the creation of a universe out of nothing—has been overwhelmingly discredited, and he who believes it now is looked upon as a fossiliferous relic of barbarous days. The feeding of the multitude by Jesus has been gradually transformed from a material transaction into a figurativ ecclesiastical rite, and most people now think that Lazarus was only in a trance. The miracle of the resurrection, the chief pillar of the church, like all the others, has been discredited. The authorship of the "historical" books of the New Testament has been indisputably shown to be anonymous, and the unreliability of the writers, whoever they were, is so thoroughly proven that the only ground upon which a miracle can be believed—the testimony of witnesses of the phenomenon—is utterly removed from under this resurrection miracle. Supposing a dead man could come to life—which is positivly contradicted by the known facts of science—there is no reliable evidence that Jesus did come from the tomb. No reliance can be placed on a single detail of the stories of the four evangelists, and as evidence they are absolutely of no value. They are full of wild statements and irreconcilable contradictions, of glaring inconsistencies and impossibilities, and though we may excuse them for their numberless contradictions, the excuse itself is an admission of an incompetence which renders their evidence valueless. If God inspired them they should hav told the truth; and truth being an agreement of statement with fact, there should be no contradictions to excuse.

"If Christ be not risen," said Paul, "then is our preaching vain." If there is a Christian in the world who can reconcile the statements of the four evangelists and the apostle Paul concerning the resurrection, and rescue the reputations of all four of them, his coming forward may allay the feeling of disgust with which all relations of supernatural events are regarded in this skeptical age. Unless there be such a one it looks as though the scorn of the practical toward miraculous events will be turned to distrust of Christianity and desertion of those who teach it.

The Rights of Soldiers and Militiamen.

An Infidel soldier in the regular army who should from conscientious scruples refuse to attend so-called divine worship when ordered to do so by his superior officer would be subject to court-martial. Though he might afterward appeal from the order, his conscience would hav heen outraged, and his rights under our national Constitution tyrannically violated. And it is doubtful whether a Christian commanding officer or secretary of war would consider that an Infidel soldier had any religious rights they were bound to respect.

The laws for militia vary in the different states. The Fourth Regiment Michigan State Troops has just had an interesting experience with the chaplain question. The militia law of Michigan provides each regiment with a chaplain. The Detroit Evening News thinks the legislature made the provision on the principle that the office would sound well, come cheap, and do no particular harm. Just what a chaplain could do for a regiment, it says, the assembled wisdom of the state had no very clear conception. The dangers of the state camp and the dress parade not furnishing the chaplain any opportunity of exercising his ministerial function, he has to drag his office in by the neck and heels, so to speak.

"It was in such a manner that Chaplain Williams of the Fourth regiment made his regiment and the public aware of the fact that they had such an officer. He extended 'a cordial invitation' to the regiment 'to attend divine service'—and the invitation, filtrating through the colonel and adjutant, took the form of 'General Orders' as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FOURTH REGIMENT
"MICHIGAN STATE TROOPS,
"DETROIT, Oct. 24, 1885.

"GENERAL ORDERS
No. 16.

"This command, having received a very cordial invitation from our chaplain, Capt. G. Mott Williams, to attend divine service in Grace church, Sunday, November 8th, at 7 P.M., will assemble in front of the Jefferson avenue armory at 6:30 P.M., sharp on that date.

"It is hoped and earnestly requested that each company will turn out as large numbers as possible.

"Chaplain Williams has arranged an appropriate service for such an occasion, to be interspersed with music, etc.

"Company dress uniforms. Side arms only.

"By order of EUGENE ROBINSON,
"Col. Commanding.

"J. I. HAIGHT,
"1st Lieut. and Adjt."

This general order provoked the men. The regiment has within its ranks, says the News, men of all denominations and of none—Infidels, Agnostics, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Jews, etc., etc., etc., who are all willing to fight together if need be for their country, but object to having a sermon of any particular sect thrust down their throat. The consequence was that only about a hundred of the regiment paid any attention to the order, the rest remaining away, and now the interesting query rises, can they be court-martialed for disobeying orders?

We think hey can. The order, as promulgated by the colonel, was plainly an order, and not an invitation, and the men who remained away from church are guilty of disobedience, to be punished after court-martial by such fine or reprimand as the court may direct. And we hope they will be. Probably most of them are nominal Christians of some sort, and after they hav had a taste of the petty tyranny which citizens of nearly all our states suffer by having Christianity made a part of the state statutes, it may be that they will demand the thorough secularization of their laws. We sincerely hope that everyone of them will be punished.

Meantime, we urge them to seriously weigh the words of the News in considering their case: "What business has the state to hav a chaplain at all, if his authority is to be ignored, his functions disregarded, and the 'general orders' of the colonel commanding in reference thereto treated with contempt? Where does the usefulness of the chaplain come in? Would it not be better, more in consonance with the purely secular character of the government of Michigan, and more in harmony with the constitution of the state, to excise the chaplain from the statute? A functionary without a function, an officer without an office, a title and rank stamped with the sanction of the state, which only creates disagreeable bickerings on a delicate subject with which the state has no constitutional concern, were certainly better abolished. In its most harmless aspect it suggests a legislativ interference with conscience, a governmental recognition of a special church, which is intolerable to the true American spirit that insists that every man shall look after his own soul in his own way, and that government has nothing to do with spiritual affairs."

Editorial Notes.

THE Thanksgiving number of the Independent publishes Charles Lamb's poem entitled "Beauty and the Beast," illustrated. The poem is well enough, but in the Independent's illustrations the Beast is considerably more recognizable than the Beauty.

C. W. STEWART writes: "I hav received a copy of Mr. J. E. Remsburg's elaborate work on 'Sabbath-Breaking,' and consider it one of the ablest and most valuable documents in our Liberal literature. It should be in the hands of all sticklers for the effete Sunday law of Christian superstition."

A GENTLEMAN who is activ in circulating the petitions for the opening of the museums on Sunday reports that "the principal opposers of the movement are rum-sellers and ministers." This is perfectly natural, as opening the museums would be injurious to the business of both.

THE Sunday visitors at the Art Museum in Boston sometimes number three or four thousand, but they giv much less trouble than the comparativly few who come on other days when a fee is charged, and who sometimes act as if they had bought the right to take liberties with the pictures and statues.

IN the program of the Evangelical Alliance for the week of prayer, the following is the text: "Occupy till I come" (Luke xix, 13). The "I," which is coming, might be construed to mean the taxation of church property, until which event religious people will continue to "occupy" as deadheads.

FREDERICK W. FARRAR'S lectures in this country hav been marked by manly, generous sentiments and a catholic spirit; and his visit to us, like that of Dean Stanley, has contributed somewhat to strengthen the friendship between his country and our own.—Religious Exchange.

The chief bond of common interest between England and America established by Canon Farrar's visit to this country will be the large number of American dollars which that ecclesiastic carries home with him as a souvenir.

"SALADIN," editor of the London Secular Review, givs notice that he will shortly lay before his readers Mr. John E. Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking." In doing so he will be performing a praiseworthy act. "Sabbath-Breaking" should be printed in all lands, and in all tongues. We hav just issued it in handsome pamphlet form, price 25 cents.

THE ministers and religious people who oppose the opening of the museums lay great stress upon the claim that Sunday is a day of rest established as such by a law which should be enforced. Yet these same people ignore the fact that there is an unenforced law in this state making eight hours a day's work. An argument is due from the pulpit on that subject if it honestly desires to lighten the burden of labor.

SOME of the critics of the American Secular Union seem to hold the opinion that in order to be a true Freethinker a person must necessarily be disreputable. Mr. E. C. Walker, for instance, announces that "the Union is dead, i.e., respectable." Another class of alleged Freethinkers, represented by Mr. Underwood (provided that gentleman represents anybody besides himself) find fault with the same organization for an exactly opposit reason. Between these two the Union may pursue the even tenor of its way confident of its ability to achieve the ends for which it was founded without pausing to vindicate itself in the estimation of either.

THE Christian Advocate printed a passage in defense of Christianity attributed to James Russell Lowell. The Congregationalist wrote to Mr. Lowell for a complete copy. This is the reply: "The passage which has been going the rounds of the papers is in very small part mine. Somebody has taken what I said, and supplied to suit himself in language very unlike any that I am in the habit of using." "But," inquires the editor of the Advocate, "will not Mr. Lowell favor the public with just what he did say?" Perhaps if Mr. Lowell were to express his real sentiments about Christianity, they would not be of the sort that would exactly suit the Rev. Mr. Buckley, editor of the Advocate.

THE editor of Queries, a magazine published at Buffalo, having been asked to "name ten authors whose works hav conduced in the greatest degree to the spread of Infidelity," puts the question to vote among his readers, with the following result:

1. Paine,	60	6. Gibbon,	38
2. Voltaire,	60	7. Rousseau,	36
3. Ingersoll,	53	8. Hume,	35
4. Huxley,	48	9. Tyndall,	31
5. Darwin,	42	10. Spencer,	30

Strauss, 28; Renan, 24; Hobbes, 20; J. S. Mill, 16; Volney, 10; Bolingbroke, 8; Shelley, 7; Haeckel, 6; D'Alembert, 5; Locke, Spinoza, 4 each; Diderot, Collins, 3 each; Herbert, H. Martineau, Swedenborg, Parker, Godwin, Goethe, Byron, Buckle, 2 each; scattering, 9. Total, 600.

It will be observed that this list of men accredited with having helped to spread Infidelity includes nearly all the great names of which history loves to boast. The readers of Queries would find it difficult to mention thirty equally distinguished names of men who could be accused of having done anything toward spreading superstition.

THE following political sentiments are attributed to Colonel Ingersoll by the Washington correspondent of the New York World. They may or may not correctly represent his views, but they are interesting reading about one who has in past years been such a prominent figure in Republican politics: "Colonel Ingersoll visited Washington this week for the purpose of winding up his affairs here. He came here in 1877 and has always spent his winters in Washington since. I met him on Pennsylvania avenue yesterday morning and got him to talk politics for a few moments. He is out of politics now, and does not care to talk much on this subject. What he did say, however, was interesting. He said that the only advantage that he could see for the Republican party in the late election in New York was the fact that the Mugwumps had to stand up and be counted. When counted the line was found to be very short at both ends. The colonel said that the Republican party, in their past fear of the Mugwumps, were like the terrified boy who had lain awake all night shuddering with terror at the sight of a ghost standing over his bed. But when daylight came the ghost was his shirt. He believes that the Republican party has gone out of power for a long time. He says that the only thing that can help them is a new conscience. I asked him what he thought was the cause of the downfall of the Republican party. He said it had gone to pieces on account of its loss of honesty and morality. He said that the attempt to make the Southern issue prominent now since the party had gone out of power was a great blunder. It was too late for that sort of thing. The Republican party had had its opportunity for over twenty years to settle what they are pleased to call the Southern question. The trouble was that they had never been honest in their standing up for the negro in the South. Grant laughed when Ames was driven out of Mississippi, and Hayes and his crowd traded off the very last rag of the claims of the Republican party in the South to obtain national power. The party had lost its old strength, and until it regained something of that sort it could never hope to succeed. The party, too, had been cowardly on the Chinese question. 'Why,' said the colonel, 'when Hunt was minister to Russia he sent a letter to Arthur telling him of the persecutions of the Hebrews in Russia. He urged upon him the importance of his using his good offices with the Russian government to protect them from such revolting cruelties as were practiced upon them. Arthur said that he would ask them in an unofficial way to interfere, but he did not dare to ask them officially, for fear they would turn about and ask us why we did not protect the Chinese in this country before looking abroad for oppressions to correct.' The colonel then wound up his post-mortem examination of the Republican party by saying: 'The Samson of the Republican party has been in the toils of the Delilah of policy, and as a necessary consequence has been shorn of his strength and has gone down to ruin.' I asked the colonel if he thought that Blaine would ever be a candidate again. 'Oh, I guess not,' said he. 'I should not think he would want it. I can hardly imagin his wanting to go through with another fight of the kind he had last year.' The colonel said he took very little interest in this administration, but what he knew of it pleased him. He has a special admiration for Secretary Lamar. He thinks that he has one of the greatest brains of any man in the cabinet, and one of the fairest and most liberal of minds."

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. H. S. LAKE, who has been lecturing to large audiences at Grand Rapids, Mich., since Sept. 14th, will speak for the Independent Congregation of Alliance, Ohio, for the month of December.

T. M. HORNE, of Freeman, Mo., announces that after January 1st he will be ready to visit any place in his state or eastern Kansas to lecture upon Freethought subjects. For several years, Mr. Horne writes, he has been teaching and lecturing upon elocution.

C. B. REYNOLDS will lecture to-morrow, December 13th, for Friendship Liberal League of Philadelphia, at Industrial Hall. Subjects: afternoon, "Defense of the Devil;" evening, "The Nine Demands of Liberalism." S. P. Putnam will speak for the Laegue on Sunday, December 20th.

ANNOUNCING a recent lecture at Maitland, Mo., by Miss Helen H. Gardener, the Maitland Monitor says: "Miss Gardener is a fluent speaker, and although your views on religion may not exactly coincide with hers, yet many new ideas may present themselvs that will giv you ground for serious reflection, and may be of much help to you both morally and intellectually."

IN selecting topics for the winter's lecture work, C. W. Stewart has chosen those upon which the general public very much needs enlightenment. He has prepared a series of lectures upon evolution, including "Astronomy," "Matter and Force," "Geology," the "Origin of Life," and "Origin and Evolution of Intellect." Mr. Stewart will be at Lancaster, Ia., from the 12th to the 18th inst., at Hayesville during the third week of this month, and at Ottumwa during January.

J. L. ANDREW reports: "Since I last wrote I hav lectured in Scandia and Marysville, Kan. On the first night at Scandia the audience numbered about one hundred; on the second night at least three hundred. The impression produced by these lectures is among the best I hav yet seen. At the request of the prominent Liberals I shall revisit Scandia, and expect to hav a still larger audience than before. I hope you will be successful in making THE TRUTH SEEKER an illustrated paper. I will do my best in increasing your list of subscribers."

J. E. REMSBURG has reached Kansas after a tour of eight thousand miles. He delivered eighty lectures. Mr. Remsburg is now in Kansas. He spoke at Netawaka December 12th and 13th; Concordia, 14th; Minneapolis, 15th, 16th, and 17th. He lectures at Dunlap, 19th and 20th; Newton, 21st, 22d, and 23d; Wichita, 24th; Weir City, 26th and 27th. New Thought says: "On Monday evening J. E. Remsburg delivered his famous lecture on Thomas Paine. The hall was crowded to its utmost with attentiv listeners. Never was the author-hero more eloquently defended than on that occasion. This lecture is said to be one of Mr. Remsburg's best efforts. While he avoids any expression calculated to offend the most delicate ear, his cool sarcasm cuts like a Damascus blade; his withering rebukes are arguments in themselvs; his fine language, perfect articulation, and sound logic never fail to captivate an intelligent audience. Undoubtedly his lectures in Ottumwa hav given the Liberal movement a new impetus."

THE Republic County Chief, Scandia, Kan., says under date of Nov. 27th: "Mr. J. L. Andrew, of England, gave free lectures in the city hall here last Monday and Tuesday evenings on the subjects of 'Modern Infidelity,' and 'Christianity and Modern Civilization.' Monday evening he discoursed on the subject of 'Modern Infidelity,' sticking to his text, and made a good, sound plea in behalf of Infidelity. Tuesday evening he ably handled the subject of 'Christianity and Modern Civilization,' and maintained by logic and philosophy that the teachings of Infidelity were better, more pure and elevating, than those of the orthodox. His lectures are highly interesting and instructiv, and giv food for thought to the most matured and brightest of minds. He is a philosopher, a rapid thinker, and a splendid reasoner, and does not deal with ridicule in his lectures. He gave to orthodoxy some hard nuts to crack. His train of Freethought is deserving of more than a passing notice, and should be well weighed by all who hear him. His teachings are refining, practical, and to the point."

MRS. A. M. FREEMAN, chairman of the lecture committee of the Chicago Secular Union, writes: "Last Sunday, Nov. 29th, Mr. Charles Watts gave two lectures before the Chicago Secular Union. In the afternoon Mr. Watts spoke to a large, intelligent, and appreciativ audience upon 'Unbelief.' In the evening he gave a magnificent lecture to a magnificent audience upon 'The American Secular Union—The Necessity and Justice of Its Demands.' Mr. Watts, as all those who hav heard him know, is a brilliant speaker, and for presenting facts and incontrovertible reasoning is second to none. The lecturer was frequently interrupted with bursts of laughter and applause. Mr. Watts made many warm friends and secured many admirers in Chicago, and those hearing him eagerly expressed their desire to hav him come to us again. Mr. Watts is a grand addition to Freethought in America, and should be heard in every city, town, and community in the country. Wherever speaking, he must do an incalculable amount of good. The people need to meet him face to face, to feel the magnetism of the man's earnestness, to appreciate his sincerity, loyalty, and devotion to the cause. In the afternoon Mr. E. A. Stevens presented a paper in memoriam on the death of Elizur Wright. I am sorry that I am unable to send a copy of it, as it embodied in touching and eloquent words an appreciation of the dead hero's life and work and the immortality he had carved out for himself by having so lived that he had won an enduring remembrance in the hearts of men. On Saturday evening a reception was given Mr. Watts at the residence of Mr. O'Neal, a whole-souled, earnest Liberalist. The evening passed very pleasantly with recitations and singing, Mr. Watts himself contributing no little to the occasion by giving in fine style a selection from 'The Lady of Lyons.' Prof. A. Nolan Martin gave some inimitable character representations, also a scene from 'Toodles' and 'Hamlet.' The Chicago Secular Union is in a flourishing condition. At the sami-annual election of officers, Dr. J. H. Randall was re-elected president, Mr. E. A. Stevens vice-president, Ella L. Page secretary, Mr. Thomas Galpin treasurer, and Mrs. A. M. Freeman financial secretary. The Union has a number of members who often lecture for it: Mr. Randall, Mr. Sawyer, Professor Orchardson, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Magie, Mr. Haynes, Ella L. Page, Mr. Abbott, and others."

Letters from Friends.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In regard to illustrating THE TRUTH SEEKER, I would say that I should be pleased if it can be done, and to that end will pledge ten dollars ($10) a year.

Hoping you will receive sufficient aid to carry out the project, I remain, Very truly yours, J. C. ROE.

THE ALBANY CONVENTION.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: There has been a good deal said about this subject by a number of persons who seem to look at matters from different standpoints, and of course come to very different conclusions. I feel called upon to add a few lines upon several matters discussed, making some corrections in regard to reformers in past times, and some suggestions to my fellow-reformers of to-day. And first, I want to say to friends Mitchell and Heywood that free speech was often disallowed in antislavery conventions, and men and women stooped, as they do to day, to calling each other bad names because of opinions honestly entertained, which were not in accordance with the morals of the past. I hav seen a woman taken up bodily by two men and set down outside the hall and not allowed to go in again, because she was considered, in the language of to-day, a crank, and would say things not agreeable to the majority. I hav seen a man who had given hundreds of dollars to the work of the slave's emancipation turned from the table where a free lunch had been prepared for those who came from a distance, and told that a man who believed in the social freedom, which Mr. Heywood advocates, was not welcome, inasmuch as his presence compromised the respectability of the antislavery convention, and those who attended it. So, my friends, others before you hav been sufferers for their opinions, and at the hands of, I hesitate not to say, as noble a set of people as the world has ever seen; but they had their limitations, and so failed to allow to others the freedom they demanded for themselvs.

We all wish to be respected, but I believe the reformers of the nineteenth century will be obliged, like Jesus of Nazareth, "to make themselvs of no reputation," if they will save the world; and yet in the end character, not reputation, triumphs. No matter if Courtlandt Palmer should attend twenty conventions where there should be men who advocate entire social freedom, and women who sell Anarchist papers, no person, man or woman, could be in his presence five minutes without pronouncing him a gentleman in the best sense of that word. I am sorry he did not giv his "hand to Mr. Heywood." A man in Mr. Palmer's position cannot afford to be petty; he can afford to be magnanimous. A man capable and willing to write and deliver such a lecture as he (Mr. Palmer) gave at Albany, need not be troubled, even should he be accused of "eating with publicans and sinners." When the real reformer, I mean the consistent Freethinker, shall come, we shall find him far above what any of us hav reached as yet, but he shall come at the right time and place. He will not find it his duty to complain of the style of Mrs. Tillotson's dress, or be mortified that she comes into a convention dressed in a fashion that is not approved by the majority, and our friend "Mallonee, of Cleveland," will not hold up to woman the scarecrow of the past, "old-maidism," to frighten her out of her human rights. He says, "She has a right to be protected from political work;" it seems to me she has a right to be protected from man in the position of a brutal husband whom the man-made law allows to tyrannize over her. Who shall protect her but herself? I hav no possible objection to Mr. Mallonee ordering coal for his wife, but I will introduce him to a woman, should I ever meet him, who, though she has been married twice, has for thirty years not only ordered her coal but has earned and paid for it full price, though she has received for work about half the amount paid to a man for the same, and then, if he likes such acquaintances, thousands more in like circumstances. Death does not stop in his fatal work to ask if his victim is a married man. Where our friend finds his "strong-minded girls" who are "old maids," I can not make out. If he will make out a list of such I will quadruple the number with married women, but if there are women who choose not to marry, what then? Are such persons any less respectable and respected? If Mr. Mallonee was where I was during the war he saw many women doing as valiant work for freedom as carrying a musket; but my note is long and I must stop. Yours for freedom in thought, word, and deed, LUCY N. COLMAN.

NEWPORT, ME.

MR. EDITOR: "The individual must be supreme, and there must be no authority!" A grand idea. Why did not the generals of the Albany Convention think of that before? But better late than never. SEWARD MITCHELL.

LEXINGTON, KY., November 16, 285.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read with great interest the arguments pro and con of the Mitchell-Heywood case, and if not imposing too much on your good nature and those of the parties engaged in the controversy, I would like to add a few words myself to what has already been said on this interesting subject. But I do not want pugnare pugnam with our kind friends, but on the contrary I cupio me erse clementem with all whom I hav dealings with, and as this question is in the interest of all Freethinkers, I hope the two gentlemen, Mitchell and Heywood, will not consider that it is always insipientis est dicere non putaram to offer a few remarks.

The gentlemen named I hav no personal acquaintance with, but from what I hav read of them I hav no doubt but that they are honest and sincere, however wrong they may be in their teachings. Yet their doctrins of Freelove and Anarchy hav no place in the Liberal movement, and if the issue is forced upon our organizations, the quicker such organizations are disbanded the better for the cause.

Mr. Mitchell, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 14th ult., places great stress upon the fact that this country has laws against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, and what Mr. Heywood terms "physiological intelligence." These laws our honest but our misguided old friend would ignore and set them aside simply because he desires to sell his demoralizing paper "unmolested by any power in the world." He is working for his own individual self, and cares nothing for the feelings, morals, or the rights of others; indeed, the latter is chiefly a secondary consideration with him.

All the papers, according to Mr. Mitchell, with the single exception of the Nonconformist, hav been on the side of "despotism," and uttered no protest against the "outrageous arrest." And these papers were right. Mr. Mitchell knew at the time, and now knows, that he was breaking the laws of his country by selling his obscene sheet. He also knew the penalty attached to such disobedience, and now for him to publicly rebuke those offending journals and those three "ruffian officers" for doing their duty by arresting an "innocent man," is simply an acknowledgment of his guilt. The old gentleman has no one to blame but himself. He went to the Convention with his eyes open, and with full foreknowledge of what was required of him; knowingly broke and violated the laws of his country; allowed his paper, the World's Reformer, to be represented as the organ of the Convention, without correcting the mistake, and now, instead of abiding by the consequences, as a true man should, in silence, he proves himself, as indeed he is, an hostis virtutibus inoperatione by charging Mr. Palmer and the Convention with complicity in the alleged outrage.

If the "silly twaddle" of C. B. Reynolds is not worth replying to, why refer to Mr. Reynolds at all? This reference of Mr. Mitchell is a confession of weakness on the part of the latter gentleman, and proves that the statement of Mr. Reynolds, instead of being "silly twaddle," is true in every particular.

Mr. Mitchell has a right, he says, to sell anything, be it obscene or otherwise. Has he? But granting that he has, the same argument can be applied with equal force and propriety to the murderer and robber. These criminals, if Mr. Mitchell's sophistical remarks were true, would hav the same right to publish papers advocating murder and robbery as our old friend has to publish and sell papers advocating obscenity. But as we hav laws, moral and legal, against both, Mr. Mitchell can just as legally and morally sell obscenity as I can go out and kill my neighbor. A true citizen, under whatever circumstances he may be placed, will invariably obey the laws of the land, however much he may dislike them. Otherwise, he is not only a law-breaker and criminal, but a traitor to his country as well.

Mr. Mitchell would like someone to tell him what right any body of men hav to dictate what he shall sell to anyone who chooses to buy. If the article he sells demoralizes instead of elevating the purchaser; destroys the peace instead of promoting the happiness of the people, and inflames lustful passions, instead of teaching that it is manly and womanly to restrain such passions, I say, and all other law-abiding citizens will say the same, that he shall not sell anything to anyone who chooses to buy. Any man, be he Infidel or Christian, who publishes and circulates obscene literature, or any books or papers demoralizing in their tendency, should be compelled by law to resort to more decent employment for a living. I hav not the least sympathy for Freelovers and their filthy publications, and I would respectfully submit to all such, if they wish to practice their abominable doctrin, that they emigrate to Utah or some other country where they would not be required to acknowlede ob temperantia legibus, and where they would not be annoyed with the displeasure and opposition of decent people.

There are some points in Mr. Heywood's and Dr. Juliet H. Severance's articles I would very much like to notice, but this communication has already grown too long—much longer than I expected it would—which precludes the possibility of my doing so at the present time.

And now, Mr. Editor, after submitting the above without fear or favor, and hoping that Mr. Palmer may be as successful in his fight as Cæsar of old, who hostes aggressus fugavit, I cannot close without thanking him, Mr. Palmer, most heartily for the manly, noble, and heroic stand he has taken in this matter.

Yours ever for the right and against the wrong,

D. B. COZINE.

PROHIBITION FALLACIES.

VALLEY FALLS, KAN., Dec. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Frank Martin says: "What is the thing desired to be prohibited? Is it intoxicants—as we would prohibit a crime? No! It is the criminal part—the traffic."

What nonsense! The crime alone comes in when the individual under the influence of liquor commits it. The selling of the liquor is no more a crime, in itself, than is the selling of a butcher knife. The buyer of the latter may use it wherewith to kill his neighbor. Shall the sale of butcher knives therefore be prohibited? Yes, according to the luminous logic of Mr. Martin.

"It does not prohibit intoxicants from being made and used, but from being made and sold as a drink."

This is the old sophistical argument, and is disposed of in the single incontrovertible statement that to deny the means to an end is to deny the end. To prevent intoxicants from "being made and used" is the sole end and object of Prohibition, else it has no end and object. What rank dissimulation, then, to aver that Prohibition is not intended to prevent intoxicants from "being made and used," but only from being "sold as a (sic) drink!" Not one Prohibitionist in a hundred has the manly courage to stand up and frankly say that he desires to prevent, through Prohibition, the use of intoxicants. Oh, no, it is only the sale! They know that the people would not listen to them if they should stand by the logic of their position and make an honest statement of their real intentions. So they talk sophistically about "preventing the sale only!"

"What is the difference in effect if I, by force, overpower a person and take his property, or I weaken his faculties by poison so he givs me his property?"

If he be fool enough to take the poison, he must run his own risks and pay his own costs. The priest poisons the mind of his dupe with his lies about the gods and devils, and heavens and hells, and so "weakens his faculties" that he givs the priest his property. "What is the difference in effect" between this way of fleecing his victim and "by force" overpowering him and "taking his property?" There is none, and yet Mr. Martin will not hav the hardihood to say that the priest should be "prohibited" from exercising his functions. But did Mr. Martin desire to be consistent he would frankly say this or abandon Prohibition once and forever.

"But for those who will place upon the market anything that is injurious to others—Prohibition." So? Well, how about tobacco, tea, coffee, pork, lard, corsets, face paints, etc.?

E. C. WALKER.

SHALL WE HAV FREE RUM?

KENT, O., Dec. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hav known Mr. E. H. Heywood too long and too favorably to really believe him capable of cherishing grossly irrational views, but it is undeniable that, with an almost matchless command of superb English, he allows himself to be misunderstood by such sensible people as do not know him as well as they ought. He has, assuredly, set himself right with reference to the "God" superstition (see THE TRUTH SEEKER, Nov. 7th) with an explicitness truly commendable.

Mr. Heywood's deep grief on account of my inconsistencies is very flattering to me. But if I understand myself, I apply the same principle to all phases of human activity. I tolerate free rum in precisely the same sense that I do free love. Tolerate is the word in either case. I hold rum in perfect abhorrence, and hav not much greater appreciation for most of what are called "love manifestations." I believe in freedom. It is the right of humanity, and the only condition of development. But freedom is a universal principle. He who is not in favor of freedom as a principle is in favor of slavery. The worst tyrant or bigot on earth is in favor of opportunity to do what he approves. He who tolerates free thought; free love, and free rum because he believes in them, but upholds a tariff because free trade does not meet his notions, is a slaveholder. Every human being has a right to do anything he or she pleases that does not infringe the right of any other. This principle is the only just rule of action, the only rational basis of an orderly human society. Mr. Heywood would, unwittingly perhaps, convey the impression that I would interfere with a man's freedom to drink rum. Not at all. I would defend his right to drink all he could hold, in the same spirit that I would defend one of his Freelove conventions against a pro-marriage mob. But I hold society to be under no obligation whatever to endure outrage as the result of rum-drinking, "love-making," or the gratification of any other human impulse. It is a very nice thing, I admit, to draw the line, in practice, between those performances that are, and those that are not, an infringement of others' rights. But there can be no possible doubt as to the soundness of the principle.

Whatever may be said of the bare question of Prohibition, the "Prohibition party" merits the utterest contempt for the reason that, while it is avowedly a temperance party, it is run in the interest of religion, by a set of priests who would probably do nothing for it if it was merely a temperance party, and gave these hypocrits no opportunity to peddle their own wares and grind their own axes.

But Mr. Heywood charges me with being a Greenbacker. I plead guilty to this charge. If it is a bad thing to be a Greenbacker, I am one of the worst men in America. But where the "tyranny" comes in I am too stupid to see. If we are to hav a government at all, I do not see why it should not hav the right to issue its own notes, a right Mr. Heywood is understood to claim for himself. I do not understand his system of banking as well as I hope to do, but know of no objection to it. But he must giv Uncle Samuel an equal chance—there must be no monopoly.

I beg leave to congratulate Mr. Heywood for his eloquent and masterly defense of correct positions taken in his letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 14th. The same to Mrs. Severance. FRANCIS BARRY.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. W. Perkins having declared war of extermination against all gods and goddesses, and expressed a desire to read from the pens of truth-loving Freethinkers, promising that he will find time to answer, I would invite his attention to Liberty, an old heathen divinity who has a historical record of licentious debauchery and vindictiv cruelty. That record appears to hav been corroborated by what is called the Reign of Terror, in France, when Liberty ruled supreme and her worshipers rioted in human blood.

Liberty does not appear to be a synonym of freedom. Liberty implies license, and will not admit of restraint, for where restraint begins liberty must end. But freedom implies exemption, and obviously requires just restraint to make it practicable. Liberty cannot consistently recognize any law, nor yield to any, but of force; freedom appeals to justice for her vindication. Justice—stern, despotic justice—should be the chief merit of superior intelligence, and should secure to us all the liberty that is compatible with equity. The efforts of man to secure more hav consigned us to slavery, and slavery to Mammon, who is the most licentious and cruel of all the gods, and unfortunately is not a myth but an outrageous reality. Mr. Perkins appears to hav overlooked the claim of this time-honored old curmudgeon to our especial attention when raiding upon the gods. I think we should hav the courage, and a disposition, to make a dash at him occasionally, and not waste all our valor on phantoms of a distorted human imagination.

Mammon appears to be a term employed to personify private monopoly of wealth. Private ownership makes division and a distribution of wealth to its several owners an absolute necessity. Then those who do not believe in division and distribution of wealth cannot consistently reject community of wealth, which, as the term implies, is the antipode of division. Nor can those consistently reject it who do not believe that a men who has two coats should giv somebody else one of them. For community of wealth should not admit of any being so poor as to hav need that others should giv them anything, nor that any should hav such a superabundance as to well afford to giv. But it requires that every man, woman, and child shall hav enough of all things to abundantly serve their need, which should be satisfactory to all but those who desire an excess with which to enact the dog in the manger. I freely admit that community of wealth should effectually muzzle that brute and shall expect to hear him howl, growl, or whine about being deprived of liberty to save his greed, regardless of the effect his doing so may hav on the efforts of others to serve their need. He may also indulge in a tirade about despotism and tyranny, but I shall prove that his tirade will be like sounding brass—plenty of sound, too much brass, and hollow as a bubble.

Despotism simply implies authority from which there is no appeal. We should hav but little confidence in, nor respect for, a government that is not invested with such authority, for instead of protecting us from fraud and spoliation, it will be the servil tool of grasping knaves, who will carry it in their breeches pocket and proclaim it the very best government under the sun, and a venal press and deluded people will echo its praise again.

Tyranny simply implies a strict enforcement of law, and vigilant guard against its violation. We shall get but little protection from law that can be violated or evaded with impunity. Licentiousness and cruelty being incompatible with justice, neither despotism nor tyranny can be unjust nor cruel when applied to the administration of just principles.

The actions of men being necessarily controled by the conditions to which they are subjected, we should not reasonably expect or require them to be just unless they are subjected to established conditions that will enable and compel them to be so. Therefore, giv liberty to brutes, who hav not intelligence to comprehend and appreciate just principles, but giv men stern, despotic justice, tyrannically administered, for we can hav no reasonable hope that man will be just to man until the nations are ruled in equity with a rod of iron. The rod should find its strength in the will and wisdom of the governed. The nations hav hitherto been ruled with the barbarian's club, the club being wielded without regard for justice, honor, or decency; through the agency of an organized institution called government we hav an enlightened Christian civilization. Will Mr. Perkins please respond?

J. A. TUTTLE.

ALLIANCE, OHIO, Nov. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: According to arrangement, Mr. Charles Watts, the great English Secularist, lectured here on Monday and Tuesday evenings, the 16th and 17th. He had splendid audiences both evenings. The subject Monday evening was, "Secularism, Destructiv and Constructiv;" on Tuesday evening, "Unbelief, Its Nature and What It Has Done for the World." To say they were well handled is only telling you something you and everyone else knows that has heard Mr. Watts. Good seed was sown and we expect a rich harvest in the near future, as the Secularists in this neighborhood are waking up to a sense of their duties as advocates of liberty for "Man, Woman, and Child." We expect Mr. Watts here again during the winter, and feel certain he will hav larger audiences then than on this visit, as everyone who heard him speaks in the highest terms of praise. Let the good work go on.

G. W. THORNBURGH.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: As one who has been liberated from church organization more than forty years ago by Freethought, I wish to say a few words on that subject. When I left the church, I knew nothing of the effects of liberty except from the experience of Freethought. They said I could never succeed outside the church, for I was like a ship at sea without a compass or rudder. But I composed myself. Freethought was the rudder upon which I was entirely dependent for steerage, nature was my guiding star, and the winds of evolution and progression hav wafted me onward until I hav anchored, and still find myself, upon the rock of Freethought. And what is Freethought? Freethought is the independent action of the brain. When I was a church-member, and belonged to that organization, my thought was submitted to the general action of the brain, which gave no individual Freethought or independent liberty to the action of personal brain. Thus, if chained to church organism, my mind becomes clogged and bewildered. It seems to me impossible to join in a central point of organism and yet be free; my liberties are forced by the law of enactment. It is very true that there is a standard to which all must be attracted, but there are diverse routes befitting our individual organisms, leading direct to the general central point, or standard, to which all must come by Liberal Freethought, and that standard is made known to us through the laws of nature. We are not to be pointed to it by organized enactment. It is fundamental, and written on the brain, and can be made known only by independent thought. If we are to depend upon our brothers' thoughts, or any general enactment, we shall never find the truth, which is Christ. Christ is not a person, but is the mental philosophy of Nature; or, in other words, the generator of intellectual knowledge. We hav been educated in Catholicism and Protestantism, which depend wholly upon the letter, and are killed by it; and many of us who profess Freethought hav not yet arisen from the deadness and stench of the letter of the Bible, but are laboring under the burden of its shadowing expression. Thus the cloud of the letter is so dense that the spirit of it (the Christ) has ascended out of sight, and thus Freethought is left to wallow in the mire of sectarianism. Your conventions are glorious and triumphant; your leaders are very able men; your president's philosophy is immeasurable. Though a man may hav all knowledge, and be able to speak with angels' tongues, without charity he becomes as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, as Paul truly said. You often quote from the Bible when its passages fit into your argument When you place the Bible as a useless myth you put out your own eyes. The letter is a stumbling stone, because it is generally metaphorical. The whole tenor of the teaching of Jesus was in metaphors or parables. "Thus without a parable spake he not unto them." His whole teaching was figurativ and prophetic, and we hav just come to its application. He lived and died in his time as all animal nature must—by the laws of Nature; but his prophetic metaphors liv to-day, and their philosophy can be seen in the organism of liberty, the female of nature, which is embodied in man. The woman now comes to the surface in the organization of Freethought (the freedom of woman). The way will now open for the personal liberty of woman, who must obtain her natural freedom from the selfish enactments of man. Man in his brutal selfishness will enslave her as long as he can, but her ingenuity and mental credulity will giv her the victory.

It has become very important that woman should obtain her personal liberty, as it is from her as the generator of life that we are to hav a more perfect knowledge of physiology and the uses and abuses of the human structure. And when a perfect knowledge is thus gained, and other corresponding improvements befitting our knowledge of the human structure to be applied in every case of necessity, what is to hinder the lives of the next generation from being vigorous and strong, having a thorough knowledge of all the natural wants and necessities of the body, and the wisdom to avoid all excesses? Oh, what pleasure and happiness when a person's youth will exceed a hundred years—when his aches and pains are forever abridged. Gen. ii, 9: "And out of the ground [woman] made the Lord God to grow every tree that was pleasant to the sight." The true signification of the comparison is that every tree (person) that is born at the time when the knowledge of the human structure shall prevail, is pleasant to behold. Every tree (offspring) shall be pleasant to the sight, because begotten and born of healthy and vigorous parents. Every child (tree of life) will be beautiful, being the offspring of virgin freedom, and educated in the unity, equality, knowledge, and non-distinction tree of good and evil. This last enemy, death (distinction), must be swallowed up in victory. The Jesus of organization must deliver up his kingdom to the father (nature), that verity, the woman of collectiv Freethought, may be all-in all. Thus this corruptible (Jesus) must put on incorruption, and this mortal (letter of the Bible) must put on immortality. The old heavens of orthodox education with a personal Jesus must and will be rolled together as a scroll, and the earthly idea of a physical creation is being burned up, and to be replaced by the new heaven of Freethought and a new earth of liberal and personal enactment by woman.

ZENAS KENT.

CORVALLIS, OR, Nov. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The courteous letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 7th, by C. L. James, without any legal robbers or dynamite prescriptions, was truly appreciated. Government should be credited with the good parts of civilization, because, with few exceptions, it is found in harmony with them, while, with correspondingly few exceptions, it is against the evils which exist in spite of, not by reason of, law. The comparison of the sexual relations of savage and civilized people was an unfortunate one for his theory. The savage woman being the slave of every man is the result of utter absence of law, while the civilized woman being, as he puts it, the slave of but one man, is evidently the result of considerable law. I am well pleased that Mr. James so cheerfully agrees with me as to some of the social usages, for in social usage can be traced the origin of law. Instead of its being, as Mr. James says, a robber conspiracy, in other words, law has been and is evolved from human necessity, either real or fancied. What is public opinion or social usage to-day becomes law to-morrow, provided a revulsion does not take place either before or after becoming law. If after, then it becomes what is termed a dead letter. I wish to congratulate all Materialists, for terra firma is the only sure foundation we can stand on.

L. JOY.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Nov. 30, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In a late number of the THE TRUTH SEEKER appeared two letters from Grand Rapids, giving some account of the status of Freethought in this city, but as both your correspondents seemed to be unaware of many facts in connection with the work here, I feel constrained to add a little to what they wrote. As stated, this city has a large Liberal element, which, however, is not due in great degree to the desultory warfare of occasional visiting lecturers, but to the steady labor of different associations and organizations that hav come to stay.

Knowing, by long experience, that THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the cause of liberty and progress, and is not the special organ of any particular branch of the army of Freethought, I propose to giv credit where credit is due. In the first place, the chief credit for the growth of progressiv ideas in this city is, without doubt, due to the Spiritualists, who are numerous and generally fully abreast with the times and the developments of science. For many years they hav kept up their meetings in some form or other almost constantly, and their numbers are continually increasing, being drawn mostly from the churches, thus weakening the enemy while adding to the army of progress.

The Universalist Society has been ministered to for the last ten years by one of the ablest and most progressiv ministers in the Liberal pulpit. He is entirely without superstition, and the Liberalizing tendency of his discourses is marked and permanent. In addition there is a Unitarian Society, well attended and thoroughly progressiv and Liberal. There is also a Liberal Society or church among the Hollanders, which people are very numerous hereabouts. So you see by the above that the "means of grace," Liberally speaking, are very plentiful in this thriving and beautiful city.

For two months Mrs. Lake and myself hav been holding independent meetings at Science Hall with excellent attendance and increasing interest.

If I had any criticism to make it would be that the Liberal forces are too much divided, and therefore the work is too expensiv. Could the Liberal element be more consolidated, the expense would be greatly lessened and the support of the workers would be more in accord with the value of their labors.

The lectures by Mrs. Krekel and Messrs. Remsburg and Watts, under the auspices of Mr. D. A. Blodgett, were well attended, especially those of Mr. Watts, whose Sunday evening lecture was listened to by nearly eighteen hundred people, an evidence of the success of the Liberalizing means above referred to, as well as a fine compliment to the ability of the lecturer, who unquestionably made a lasting impression on nearly all who heard him.

Mrs. Lake and myself hav closed our meetings here for the present, Mrs. Lake having a call to Alliance, Ohio, for December, and the writer being engaged to speak for the Secular Society at Pittsburgh, Pa., during the same month. It is probable that we may return here before the winter is over.

In closing, permit me to say that THE TRUTH SEEKER is —without disparagement to others—the best strictly Liberal paper published, and although the editor modestly repudiates the claim, the paper has improved since it changed hands, and this may be said without detracting a particle from the acknowledged ability of its founder, the lamented Bennett.

Fraternally, W. F. PECK.

LAKE CITY, IA., Nov. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: We hav been having quite a quickening of the spirit among us the past week. About three weeks ago I placed a notice in our town paper that one of the most noted Freethought lecturers of the present age, John E. Remsburg, would deliver a course of three lectures in Lake City on the 10th, 11th, and 12th of November. I then went among the people of the town and vicinity whom I knew were in favor of free speech, and easily raised forty dollars to defray expenses. The time came and with it Mr. Remsburg also, and all were impressed with the thought that we had a gentleman among us. His lectures were "False Claims," "Bible Morals," and "Sabbath-Breaking." You are aware that his lectures are unsurpassed by any man living. But his manner of delivery is also unsurpassed, charming all, both Freethought and Christian alike. Our attendance was good, and I think the results will be lasting. Public sentiment is fast changing here. But a few years ago I hardly dared express my sentiments; now they are almost popular. I hav thrown Paine's works broadcast over the country, and they will yet redeem the world.

J. L. TOMPKINS.

MONTEZUMA, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Accept my thanks for your kindness in not discontinuing THE TRUTH SEEKER after my subscription had expired. I cannot do without it. I am an outspoken Liberal and a truth seeker, and may success crown the efforts being put forth for the overthrow of ignorance and superstition and for the advancement of science and knowledge and the elevation of humanity.

There is but one fault I find with THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that is I regret to see so much of its valuable space devoted to Spiritualism. It is one of the greatest humbugs of the age. I hav seen a great deal of it for the last thirty years. Some of its leaders are naturally smart men, but they are fanatical and cranky, and their followers are men and women of low morals, and I find nothing in their religion which is calculated to elevate or enlighten humanity. If spirits of the departed can come from the other world and talk with us, why do they not tell us something about it? They ought to be the ones to decide the question between religion and Infidelity.

B. F. LARKIN.

HENDERSON, MICH., Nov. 22, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $4 25, and oblige by giving $2.75 to Mr. Charles B. Reynolds, the brave and generous pioneer; the rest to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for six months.

Long liv the Secular Union.

If THE TRUTH SEEKER contained a lecture each week it would do more for humanity than all the cartoons the Rochester, N. Y., engraving house could turn out in three months. People read speeches. Pictures need interpreters to be appreciated. If in good health as now, I expect to giv at least $5 toward the Tent Fund next June. LAROY W. CUSHING.

WATERTOWN, O., Nov. 20, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find stamp for "The Religion of Humanity Better Than Eternal Punishment," by M. Babcock.

I hav been a reader of your valuable paper for a few months. I think it splendid, and expect to continue taking it as long as I am able to pay for it, and hope it will liv till the Demands of Liberalism are obtained, and as much longer as is necessary. Freethought is gradually gaining ground here, and people are beginning, even in this orthodox place, to hav their eyes opened, and to see the light. Wishing you ever success, I am, Yours for Freethought, JOHN D. MARTIN.

DUNKIRK, N. Y., Nov. 23, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find three dollars ($3.00), which please credit to my subscription.

I enjoy very much the "Gems of Thought" column, the editor of which, I think, must be a genius. He knows how to cull and arrange the good things for the intelligent thinker; but I do not deem it necessary to offer any suggestions or praise for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Any unbiased person who reads it will at once admit it to be par excellence.

Yours, WM. H. WYMAN.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Little Grenadier.*

On the field of Balaklava,
The British grenadiers
Marched in the van of battle
With clear and ringing cheers.
And with them, keeping time and step,
A lad not twelve years old—
The pet of the Third Battalion,
Wearing their red and gold.

Amid the ceaseless rain of fire,
Amid the clash of steel,
His little heart throbbed high to know
The joy that warriors feel.
From point to point, with small, fleet feet
And eager face alight,
He passed, undaunted and unharmed,
Through all that bloody fight.

But when the darkness called a truce,
And men a respit found,
And fifteen hundred Englishmen
Were lying on the ground,
Then gentle Mercy stooped and gave
The order to his heart;
And then the little hero filled
A more than hero's part.

Among the wounded grenadiers
With hopeful words he sped,
Piling the stocks of broken guns
He found among the dead;
And while men watched him flit about
In the cold, misty night,
Wondering what purpose he could hav,
Up sprang the blazing light.

Making one bright and cheerful spot
Where all was dark and cold,
And spreading saving warmth around
The men in red and gold,
While with a skilful haste he brewed
The warm, refreshing tea;
A common service, but to them
An angel ministry.

To some it was a draught of life;
To some it only gave
A moment's rest, ere they could win
The quiet of the grave.
But, oh, what eyes were raised to his!
What words were muttered low!
What fervent blessings followed him
As he passed to and fro!

His colonel loved him for the deed,
And far and wide 'twas told
How on that dark and bloody field
The boy in red and gold
Had made the tea and served the men,
With none to help or cheer;
And noble hearts praised everywhere
The little grenadier.

* The little grenadier is Thomas Keep, of the Third Battalion of British Grenadier Guards. His valor both in the battles of Inkerman and Balaklava was considered worthy of special praise, and Colonel Wood, of the Third Battalion, wrote an account of the incident, as did Philip Gilbert Hamerton, who makes the child's age ten years.—Harper's Young People.

A Twilight Reverie.

One evening, while seated at my window looking at the changing forms and colors of the sunset clouds, I began reflecting upon life and its varied experiences, remembering what a philosopher once said, that "our experience was the best legacy that we could bequeath to posterity, as this alone can add to the sum of human knowledge."

While thus watching the panorama of the moving clouds, I fell into a deep reverie, and, instead of the glowing clouds, I beheld a multitude of people of all ages, sexes, and conditions, busily gathering every conceivable thing that came in their pathway. Nothing escaped being taken up and appropriated by the vast concourse of old and young, rich and poor, noble and ignoble alike.

Some few gathered only flowers and precious gems, which they freely displayed, and even gave away to those who admired them, and were adorned with these rare gifts, while the real owners went on, poorly clad and destitute of the good things of life.

But further on I saw the graves where these kind and benevolent ones were buried along the highway, and these were covered with fresh wreaths of immortelles by many of the passers-by.

Many others would hide away whatever they found, or pilfer from those who had secured more desirable objects.

All carried large packs upon their shoulders wherein they crowded everything that came in their way, whether good or bad. Some, in their haste and greed, would snatch up serpents and other vile things, and make desperate efforts to conceal them from the view of others, but none were successful in eluding the vigilance of those who were ever on the lookout to detect and expose the mishaps and misfortunes of their fellow-travelers.

There were some who seemed from choice to delve in the mire and filth for the most abhorrent plants and poisonous insects, then apparently taking delight inburdening and tormenting others with them.

Looking at them attentivly as they passed along, it was hard to tell what each was laden with, and I wondered how or in what manner all should be finally known, and each justly rewarded for his toil, as they seemed to expect a recompense in some way.

I saw farther on there was a dark, deep river, where the highway terminated, and where all were compelled to unburden themselvs of all they carried, and were then taken, one by one, into a boat and ferried across the river.

I observed that some, on coming to the river, laid down their burdens with joy, and left them behind with an air of triumph, while many were loth to let them go, and clutched at their possessions when forced from them as they left the shore, for none could carry anything away with them.

On looking into the various bundles left scattered about I was surprised to find that the most worthless things had been often held with the greatest tenacity, and that gems and flowers of rarest excellence and beauty had been cast aside freely for the use of those who might come after them; yet I beheld that those who had possessed them appeared in the boat with shining garments on, and wore bright crowns upon their heads, decorated with gems far more brilliant than the ones left behind, while those desirous of taking their worthless treasures with them were clothed with only filthy rags, and were loth to leave the shore.

As I gazed upon the scene, pondering upon its meaning, I heard a voice that seemed to come from the other side of the river, saying: "Life is but a journey of a day, a mystic thread woven into the destined pattern of its grand ultimate, of which earth life is but the wrong side. Each life is as a thread running through the light and dark shades of the grand design, beautiful when fully complete; and there is use for every experience, however dark and dreary it may be, for thus only can the light of good deeds best be made to appear. True wisdom will be found when men shall learn that life, like all else, grows up and out of low conditions; and that the best minds are those that hav unfolded, like the pond-lily, from the dark mire of life's lowest strata, up through its dark waters of afflictions, until they hav bloomed upon the surface, and their fragrance and life-giving power were shed abroad over all the world."

Just then I felt a hand laid on my shoulder, and a voice called out: "Hadn't you better light the lamp?" This ended my reverie.

LUNA HUTCHISON.

[Mrs. Hutchison always writes to some purpose. She is sowing good seed that will blossom and bear fruit hereafter.—ED. C. C.]

Our Kitten.

There was a wee kitten that lived in a shoe,
And the longer it staid there the older it grew;
And it's, "Pray, little kitten, now, how do you do?"
"Oh, I'm pretty well, madam, pray how are you?

"My mother is Stoofin, the best of her kind;
She's gone down the garden a mousie to find;
She's gone off a-hunting and left me behind;
And she told me to stay where I am, and I'll mind.

"The shoe is right cosy, and pretty, and warm,
And here I'm in safety from all kind's of harm,
There's nought to annoy me or bring me alarm,
And the shoe it is Mary's, and fits to a charm."

LeRoy, N. Y. M.

Wonders of the Body.

Suppose your age to be fifteen or thereabouts. You hav two hundred bones and six hundred muscles; your blood weighs twenty-five pounds; your heart is five inches in length and three inches in diameter; it beats seventy times per minute, 42,000 times per hour, 100,800 per day, 35,792,000 per year. At each beat a little over two ounces of blood is thrown out of it, and each day it receives and discharges about seven tons of that wonderful fluid. Your lungs will contain a gallon of air, and you inhale 24,000 gallons per day. The aggregate surface of the air cells of your lungs, supposing them to be spread out, exceeds 20,000 square inches. The weight of your brain is three pounds; when you are a man it will weigh about eight ounces more. Your nerves exceed 10,000,000 in number. Your skin is composed of three layers, and varies from one-fourth to one-eighth of an inch in thickness. The area of your skin is about 1,700 inches. Each square inch contains about 2,500 sweating tubes or perspiratory pores, each of which may be likened to a little draining-tile one-fourth of an inch long, making an aggregate length of the surface of your body of 88,541 feet, or a tile ditch for draining the body almost seventeen miles long.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—ENIGMA.

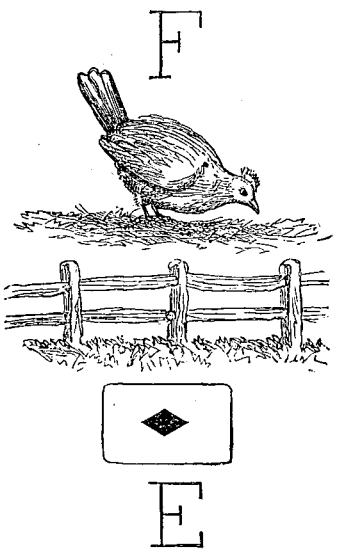
In now, not in then;
In what, not in when;
In sell, not in buy;
In wheat, not in rye;
In hill, not in dale;
In gin, not in ale;
In large, not in small;
Not in low, but in tall;
In old, not in new;
In many, not in few.

In girl, not in boy;
In grief, not in joy;
In grave, not in gay;
In night, not in day;
In sun, not in earth;
In gloom, not in mirth.
My whole is the name
Of a writer of fame.

Overton, Ga. LEE BELL.

2.—ENIGMA.

I am composed of 11 letters.
My 1, 9, 10 is a part of the wheel.
My 2, 6, 5 is a part of the clothing.
My 3, 2 is an exclamation.
My 4, 8, 7 is a heavy weight.
My 11, 7, 7, 11 is a girl's name.
My whole is a large city in one of the Southern states.



Aliceville, Kan. SAM. B. REED.

3.—CONUNDRUM.

Of what troublesome disease does the above picture remind you?

4.—DIAMOND PUZZLE.

Form a diamond, the central word to read the same downward or across.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, NOV. 28, 1885.

1.—Eve. 2.—Nelson. 3.—

302)64628(214
604

422
302

1208
1208

SOLVERS.—Edward Bambach, G. W. Williams, I. A. Pool.

Correspondence.

MIDDLE FALLS. N. Y.. Nov. 27, 1885.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: The Corner grows better from week to week, and is a potent factor for good among the children in every family it visits.

Very truly, D. LOUIS BODGE.

[Thanks for poetic favors and for your kind opinion of the Corner. It shall be our aim to continue to merit the approbation of its patrons.—ED. C. C.]

JAMESTOWN, WIS., Nov. 27, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav often thought of writing to the Children's Corner, but hav neglected doing so before. I noticed George Eliot's poems offered as a prize for poetry, and I thought I would try, but I am afraid I am too late. I liv with my grandma, three miles from Jamestown, but I am home for a few days, and noticed the offer. My ma takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we children like it better since the Children's Corner was added. Ma is the only one in town who takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, although there are other Liberals here. The well spoken of in the "Misadventure of the Frog" is ten feet deep. Hoping your life may be spared for many years that you may continue the good work you are engaged in, I remain,

Your friend, LILLIAN WORKS.

[We are glad Lillian likes the Corner, and that her good mother takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. Liberal papers should be supported by Liberals, and we trust those referred to by our friend may be induced to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER soon, and we feel sure they will never regret it.—ED. C. C.]

OMAHA, NEB., Nov. 23, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I forgot to write before, thinking Mamma would care, but she said she did not. You must excuse my writing. I am well, and hope you are the same. I am ten years old, and hav two little sisters, both younger than myself. I am in the fifth grade at school. I do not want to make my letter too long. Yours with love,

MAGGIE E. GRIFFITH.

[Maggie writes very well for a girl of ten years, but she, as well as others, can write a still more interesting letter if she will try. We hope to hear from her again.—ED. C. C.]

PITTSBURGH, PA , Nov. 29, 1885.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: I hav long admired your department, which is ably conducted, and contains just such matter as will interest and instruct children. The paper comes to our house on Friday, and when I come home in the evening I usually find the wrapper torn off and the paper folded with the Children's Corner outside, which shows that the younger members of our family appreciate your services. Respectfuly, EDWARD BAMBACH.

[Such kind words as the above encourage us to persevere in our labors for the children, who hav a warm place in our affections.—ED. C. C.]

MURRAY, IDAHO, Nov. 19, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I saw my other letter published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I thought I would write again. I like to read the Children's Corner, and think it is very nice. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since it was first published in Paris, Illinois. I will send you a puzzle for the Children's Corner.

I will close, wishing success to the Children's Corner. Yours truly,

MELISSA ERVIN.

[Thanks for your letter, Melissa, but in all cases puzzles must be accompanied by their answers, or we cannot print them. When you write again, tell something about the part of the country you liv in, and your daily occupations.—ED. C. C.]

ITHACA, MICH., Nov. 27.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I see so many little correspondents in the Children's Corner, I thought I would write, too. I am eight years old. I help mamma wash dishes. I hav pieced two quilts, and they took the first and second premiums at the fair. I go to school every day. I am a little niece of Fanny Kelly, who was five months a captiv with the Sioux Indians. She sent me a present for Thanksgiving—the history of her life while a captiv. My papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. He bought me the "Story Hour" of Mr. Reynolds when he was here. I think it very nice. If you can read my letter, I may write again soon.

Yours truly, FANNY KELLY.

[Few children of eight years are superior to Fanny. She is a bright, intelligent little girl, and we are pleased to add her name to our list of friends.—ED. C. C.]

CLEARWATER, NEB., Nov. 24, 1885.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: I believe I hav not written to you since I received your kind letter in regard to the pleasure-boat for poor old Father Hacker. I havn't heard whether anything was done for him or not, and should be glad to know if the friends of humanity became interested in his behalf. I hav been very sick, or should hav written before.

I hav another little plan, which is this: That to all the children, grown or otherwise, who will send him, say, from 25 cents to $1, I will select from my geological specimens and send to them some very pretty pieces of petrified wood and of volcanic stone, both of which make beautiful ornaments for watch-chains, etc.

I inclose some of both kinds to you that you may be able to judge of them. In the petrified wood the concentric rings made by the growth of the tree are plainly visible; also, in the stone supposed to be of volcanic origin there are many little bubbles imprisoned, so to speak, in each one, and were undoubtedly made when it was in a liquid state.

Now, let each boy and girl who would like something that will make a nice present for some friend for the holidays send in their mite to Father Hacker, and write to THE TRUTH SEEKER the amount, and I will select the handsomest pieces I hav and send without delay. I shall hav to ask that they send me two two-cent stamps to prepay postage, and write their address very plain. If they would like larger specimens, send four stamps. Yours, for humanity,

MARY B. FINCH.

[We commend the above proposition of our always good friend, Mrs. Finch, to our readers. We hav received the specimens sent us, and they are very curious and pretty. She will please accept our thanks for the same.

Grandpa Hacker's address is J. Hacker, Berlin, N. J., to whom all donations should be sent direct, while Mrs. Finch may be addressed as above.—ED. C. C.]

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever.

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

Ingersoll Catechised:

His Answers

To a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Franciscan.

Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies $1; 100 copies $3. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,

WITH AUTOGRAPH,
Price, 20 cents.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS,
Price, 40 Cents.
Address this Office.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
The Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed Independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

POCKET ATLAS

Of the

WORLD.

Containing

COLORED MAPS OF EACH STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNITED STATES; also MAPS OF THE CHIEF GRAND DIVISIONS, WITH COMPLETE INDEX OF EVERY COUNTRY ON THE FACE OF THE GLOBE.

Illustrated by more than One Hundred Colored Diagrams, Tables, Etc.

The POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD contains 128 pages. Six pages are given to title, index, etc.; 65 pages are full-page colored maps, and 57 pages are reading matter, colored diagrams, etc. The book is new throughout, everything being made expressly for it. The binding is flexible Leatherette—an imitation of Russia; gold side stamp, round corners, and red edges.

Sent by mail to any address upon receipt of 50 cents, by

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, N Y.
40

Something New!

Every Liberal should hav one of our beautiful

MOTTO CARDS,

(7x22), ready for framing, for their homes. Twenty-five cents per copy.
Also Large Cards (14x22), and expressing the NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Thirty cents each.
Circulars sent FREE. Address all orders to LIBERAL MOTTO SUPPLY CO., Troy, N. Y.
40tf

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

TRUTH:

A Poem in Three Parts.

BY E. N. KINGSLEY, Truth Finder.

SECOND EDITION.

Price, 25 Cents. THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Bible Fabrications Refuted

and

The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD. M.D.

Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

SEND TO ELMINA FOR THEM.

DIANA.—A startling book! Original in theory, scientific in treatment, and unobjectionable in language. None should marry without reading "Diana." Sexual satisfaction through magnetic influence. Love rendered permanent and lasting. Third edition, enlarged, revised, and improved. Price, 25 cents.

SOCIOLOGY.—Consisting of essays, poems, short lives of Land Reformers and other reforma ory topics; worth $2; bound in cloth and sold for 50 cents. Written by Masquerier, a good old man who has spent a lifetime in trying to help humanity.

THE DARWINS.—By Elmina. Price, 50 cents. "I have read 'The Darwins,' and am pleased with it; and so are all to whom I have lent it. Were such works more plenty, Christians would be less numerous."—D. Nielson. Three books for $1.00, and Green's Freethought Directory, price, $2.00, sent also for $1.10 $2.10 for all four.
Address MRS. E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.

WORKS OF DR. W. F. EVANS.

The Primitiv Mind-Cure. The Nature and Power of Faith; or, Elementary Lessons in Transcendental Medicin. This work is a complete exposition of principles underlying the system of mental healing. It contains a full course of instruction in the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure. Price $1.50.

The Divine Law of Cure. A standard work on the philosophy and practice of the Mind-Cure, a reliable text-book in all th schools of mental healing. No work has ever been written of more practical value to physicians of all schools. The book is the result of the extensiv learning and research of the author, and exhibits a familiarity with the literature of the subject. It is profoundly religious without being offensivly dogmatic. It has been received with universal favor by all who are seeking light on the subject on which it treats—the cure of disease in ourselvs and others by mental and spiritual agencies. Price $1.50.

Mental Medicin. A Theoretical and Practical Treatis on Medical Psychology. This book contains a full exposition of the nature and laws of magnetism, and its application to the cure of disease. Price $1.25

Soul and Body; or, The Spiritual Science of Health and Disease. Price $1.00

The Mental Cure, illustrating the Influence of the Mind on the Body both in Health and Disease, and the Psychological Method of Treatment. Price $1.50.

All the above books sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALL in a LIFETIME,

A ROMANCE.

BY MISS SUSAN H. WIXON.

"The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks. . . . But what pleased me most in this charming story was the unflinching honesty with which its author holds up to the derision of the world the rottenness of average ministerial character, particularly that of revivalist type. I hav not space here to treat, in detail, of the characters of this truly absorbing novel. Suffice it to say that it is safe to predict that anyone who reads its first chapters will be loth to lay it down till the denouement is reached. Miss Wixon has long been doing a noble work in educating our children into the ranks of true Liberalism, thereby robbing the church of hundreds of those who, in after years, might hav become its willing dupes and servil tools, and she certainly deserves the generous and substantial recognition of all Freethinkers. Let everyone send for a copy of 'All in a Lifetime.' It will yield a liberal reward for the outlay."
ELLIOTT PRESTON.

Price, $1.50. Address, THE TRUTHSEEKER.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

IMMORTALITY INHERENT IN NATURE.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Price, 60 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, N. Y

CHRISTIANITY

A REWARD FOR CRIME.

Substantiated by the Bible.

BY

O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York

A NEW DEPARTURE in Medical Science. The method of special day and night treatment is the only one that gives prompt and permanent relief in cases of FITS or Epilepsy. Two trial Bottles sent free. EPILEPTIC REMEDY CO., 47 Broad St. N. Y.

Poetry.

A Tardy Tribute.

TO THE TRIED AND TRUTHFUL GREAT.

There was one of the "heroes of '76"
Than whom none in the service put in "better licks,"
Whose pen was the prompter both of sword and of shield
From the pamphlet and press to the drum on the field.
With a mind like a sage and soul full of fire,
His was the bold language that could soldiers inspire;
And the peace that was won, when our goddess was crowned,
Makes a name to be classed with the world's most renowned.
Yet not as in warring 'gainst a tyrannous king
Did that hand of a hero work out its best thing;
For his fingers wrought deftly in liberty's cause,
Taking boldly a stand 'gainst all unequal laws,
Hitting sledge-hammer blows on Theology's head
On behalf of the people so long dumbly led;
Making war on the church, on the pope, priest, and creed,
Astounding the old faith on which bigots still feed.
Superstition he handled with hands all ungloved,
Putting reason on top of a tyrant unloved,
Assuming that God is a father most kind,
In his works still revealed to the studious mind.
Now the age is at hand in our life's fitful span
Every truth-loving soul will revere such a man.

Freeman, Mo., Oct., 1885. T. M. HORNE.

(The name of the man referred to in the above tribute may be found in the first eleven lines by reading the first letter of first line in connection with second letter of second line, third of third, and so on. Also the acrostic of last eleven lines.)

Thanksgiving Prayer.

BY M. BABCOCK.

O thou mysterious, unknowable, incomprehensible, inconceivable, invisible something or nothing, and if something, who art supposed to dwell 'way up in the skies, I address thee this day, Thursday, the 26th day of November, by request of the president of the United States; and if it is true that thou dost manage the things in this world, being a Democrat, I feel and hav no doubt that our most worthy president will most heartily join us in thanking thee for the change in the administration.

But it seems to me that our worthy president's request, in asking James G. Blaine and the Republican party to join us in thanking thee for the defeat of their party, is a little tough on our Republican friends, and I hav no doubt that our worthy president, who paid one thousand dollars to help win the election in New York, will thank thee that his money was not expended in vain.

Wilt thou, if thou art able, see that on this great day of stuffing and feasting all men shall see that all dogs, cats, horses, cattle, and every living thing that liveth are fed, and well fed, on this day. And if thou wilt see that the poor as well as the rich hav their full share of t-u-r-k-e-y-s, with digestion fully equal to their appetites, thou shalt hav all the praise that I am able to bestow upon thee.

And if it would be proper for me to make a suggestion, inasmuch as it is said that ten thousand people in India annually die of snake-bite, most respectfully I would suggest that thou wilt, at least on this day, restrain them somewhat in their desire to bite unless they will bite the bad and spare the good. And as my wife and I hav invited a poor widow to help us eat turkey this day, wilt thou see that Peter marks the act on the right side of the ledger.

An Outside View of a New Heathendom.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

We are pained by news from the United States, a recently discovered quarter of the world, wherein, as it would appear, a religion which we understand is called "Evangelical," or "Protestant," or "Christian," fails to restrain the savage passions of a race which boasts of having studied the precepts of one "Christ," or "Messiah," or some such name, for many centuries. The "republic" which professes to invite all nations to come and enjoy the liberty of its citizenship, now all at once collapses when a few Chinamen offer to labor at wages lower than the nativ Christians ask. At a place in the interior, called Rock Springs, in Wyoming territory, an armed mob of evangelical Christians attacked a Chinese camp and shot from fifty to one hundred, leaving their huts in ashes. It is said that the Chinese lament the event chiefly because the tragedy might hav been averted had China done her duty ages ago by sending heathen missionaries to America, whose teachings might hav neutralized the savagery of the prevailing evangelical religion. The civilized world must hereafter be more than ever impressed by the necessity of sending the truth to America. At the same time we hear that the religion that permits this fresh Wyoming massacre is hard at work to raise a million of dollars for self-propagandism. Queerly enough, a tribe called "Methodists," or "Wesleyans," wants to send its own gospel to the very China whose people suffered in the Wyoming massacre. Egotism and bad logic are characteristics of all false religions. One would think that those murderers should perceive that China will discount and contemn a pretended merciful gospel which slays Chinamen, and lays Chinese homes in ashes. That American savagery seems stubborn, as is proven by the fact that the people recently tried to elect to their chieftaincy a man named Blaine, or Blame, or Bland, or some such nomen, who tried to defeat his rivals by saying that the Chinese hav no business in America. That unsuccessful chief was defeated by another candidate whose party is pledged to oppose the Chinese. That party contains multitudes of foreigners, called "Irish," or "Erinites"—one cannot quite make out these obscure names—who believe that nobody ought to be allowed to immigrate except themselvs. Those Irish or Erinites are fighting for liberty, and declare that their adopted country "should be free"—of Chinamen! Curiously, these Erinites, who hav never ruled their own country, are willing to undertake the task of ruling America. There were early rumors that China would retaliate by excluding Americans from China, but the project will probably be abandoned as worthy only of savage America, and entirely unworthy of a monarchy like China, and a religion that worships idols.

The Truth Was Not In the Inspector.

From the Pittsburgh Leader.

EDITOR Leader: The inclosed communications are of sufficient significance to "point a moral and adorn a tale:"

"68 FIFTH AVENUE, PITTSBURGH, PA.,
"November 17, 1885.

"Mr. T. D. Casey, Secretary of the Western Penitentiary:

"Dear Sir: Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, wife of United States District Judge Arnold Krekel, of Kansas city, Mo, will shortly arrive in this city on a lecturing tour, and desires, by your permission, to address the prisoners in the Western penitentiary Can she do so next Sunday morning? Yours truly,

"HARRY HOOVER,
"Secretary Pittsburgh Secular Society."

"T. D. CASEY & Co.,
"IMPORTERS & WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALERS,
"971 LIBERTY ST., PITTSBURGH, PA.,
"November 18, 1885

"To Harry Hoover, Esq., Secretary Pittsburgh Secular Society:

"Dear Sir: Yours of the 17th inst, asking permission to allow Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel to lecture to the inmates of the Western penitentiary, is duly received; and in reply I would say that we will hav to decline granting such privilege, as we hav always done in the past, and we cannot make an exception in Mrs. Krekel's case. Should we grant such privileges to any, we would hav to do so to all, and you can understand such a state of affairs would not work in an institution like ours.

"Respectfully, T. D. CASEY."

So it would appear that in their zeal for impartiality the officers of the Western penitentiary hav not "granted such privilege to anyone," so that the convicts hav been without spiritual aid or moral instruction. If all hav been treated alike, Secularists certainly hav no cause to complain, and there is nothing more to be said.

But picking up a copy of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, I read: "In Philadelphia and New York Catholics are fighting for the right to hav priests in similar institutions, while here the doors are open." Ah! Free to whom? To all? Let us read a little further: "Mr. Goulden said that the Rev. Dr. Powers, principal of the Catholic college, had attended to the Western penitentiary and the Reform School last year at the request of Mr. T. D. Casey. Dr Powers was paid $500, $200 of which was paid by Mr. Casey out of his own funds." Then it would seem that Mr. Casey is not so disinterested and impartial after all. Perhaps another paragraph may explain his solicitude: "There are eight hundred prisoners in the penitentiary, of whom three hundred are Catholics." Now I do not complain of Mr. Casey providing for those of his faith, I only object to shutting out others. But, after all, I do not see that we hav anything to complain of, for I suppose that if the Western penitentiary were searched from attic to cellar with a Zentmeyer microscope, not even the ghost of a Secularist could be found.

Yours for fair play,
HARRY HOOVER,
Secretary Pittsburgh Secular Society.

"SEE," cries the chorus of admiring preachers,
"How Providence provides for all his creatures!"
"His care," the worm said, "even the insect follows:
For us he has provided wrens and swallows."

Book Notices.

INSIGHT INTO SPIRITUALISM: Exposure and Attack. By the Imperial Arch-Duke Johann of Austria. With "Logic of Facts." By the Austrian Author and Natural Philosopher, Baron L. B. Hellenbach. Boston: Mutual News Co.

This is an ornamental pamphlet of 114 pages. It seems that his Imperial Highness Johann of Austria invited Baron Hellenbach to his house at Vienna, bringing his medium, Bastian, with him, with a view to observing such spiritual manifestations as should occur. Other guests at the first seance were the Crown Prince Archduke Rudolph, Archduke Eugene, Hofrath Dr. Widerhofer, Regierungsrath Ritter von Weilen, and other gentlemen with names and titles outside the pronouncing abilities of the average reader. These arranged themselvs in the orthodox circle, and the trouble began. A guitar, a musical clock, and a drum emitted noises of a more or less mysterious nature. This constituted the first part of the seance. In the second part male and female forms appeared.

At the second seance a distinguished company was also present. The guitar and a glass tube floated unexplainably in the air or lodged in the laps of the guests. Then the medium was tied by the experimenters, but was shortly thereafter found to be untied.

At the third seance the manifestations of the two previous ones were repeated with variations. But here the Archduke Johann devised a device against the peace and well-being of the medium. In collusion with the crown prince he arranged some ropes in such a manner as to close two large and heavy doors between the materialized spirit which emerged from the cabinet into the room, and the medium who was supposed to remain in the cabinet. When the ghost was thus captured it was examined and found to be Medium Bastian masquerading as a knight. A white material like lace necessary to the impersonation of female spirits was found on the medium. The archduke regarded this in the light of an exposure, and thereupon makes some remarks reflecting upon the genuinness of spiritual phenomena.

The reply of Baron Hellenbach is a scientific treatis on Spiritualism. The capture of Bastian by the archduke and his co-conspirators he explains on the theory that the knight was Mr. Bastian transfigured. His strictures upon the Imperial Johann and his methods are severe and caustic in the extreme. He adduces many facts which are incapable of denial and apparently unexplainable on any other than the Spiritualistic hypothesis. All of which goes to show that facts often appear to conflict with other facts, and that a great many queer things in this universe are still left to be classified and told-off to their proper sphere. Between the two, Baron Hellenbach is the more earnest and sincere, the Archduke Johann's style being somewhat trivial and flippant.

The price of the book is 45 cents; to be obtained of newsdealers.

"Facts and Mysteries of Spiritism," by Joseph Hartman, is a work written to show the reality and also the danger of intercourse with spirits, in both of which the author firmly believes. The author thinks that communion with spirits produces insanity—a kind of religious delirium tremens, as it were. The mental strength of the author may be judged by his Dedication, which reads thus: "To one now in the realms above, in whose beautiful and filial earth-life the spirit of the Divine Master shone conspicuously, and whose memory clings to me like a guardian angel, ever directing my affections and thoughts to the Fountain of all Truth and Goodness—my blessed spirit daughter Dolly—these pages are affectionately," etc. Starting out with a belief in a "divine master," a "fountain of all truth and goodness," "guardian angels," and a "spirit daughter," an author may arrive at almost any miraculous conclusion without doing violence to his premises. The book contains nearly 400 pages, and sells for $1.50.

"Diana: A Psycho-Fiziological Essay on Sexual Relations for Married Men and Women. Third edition, revized and enlarged. New York: Burnz & Co., 24 Clinton Place. 1885. Price 25 cents." So reads the title-page of this unique work. In this third edition appear numerous letters expressiv of the estimation in which the doctrins of "Diana" are held by the writers of them. The whole work has undergone a revision, and some points which in former editions were left rather doubtful are now clearly stated. It is claimed to be the most scientific treatis on the peculiar subject which it discusses that has ever been published, and its chaste language adapts it for reading by old and young. It attempts, and approaches after a manner, a solution of some of the problems which are said to present themselvs to married people. "Diana" can be obtained by addressing the publisher as given.

THE English National Secular Society's Almanac for 1886 is out. It contains "The Story of 1885," by Mr. Bradlaugh; "Life as It is and as It Might Be," by Mrs. Besant; "Bible English," by G. W. Foote; Hypatia Bradlaugh, who has lately become Mrs. Bonner, contributes an article on "The Last Vision of the Virgin;" "Speaking Out," is by John Robertson; "Women and Marriage," by Alice Bradlaugh; "Wooler and the 'Black Dwarf,'" by George Standring, etc., etc. This almanac sells in England for sixpence and in America for 25 cents. It can be ordered through the Truth Seeker Company. "The Freidenker Almanach" for 1886 is also at hand, with its treasury of valuable thoughts, to which the German reading person alone has the key. Price, 25 cents. These almanacs are both able publications.

The latest publication from the press of Fowler & Wells is "Heads and Faces: How to Study Them." Octavo, 185 pages and 188 illustrations. Price 40 cents. This is a very interesting and readable book. Nelson Sizer, one of the oldest character readers in America, and Dr. H. S. Drayton, editor of the Phrenological Journal, are the authors. There are nearly two hundred illustrations, exhibiting a great variety of faces, human and animal, and many other interesting features. It is worth the price for the portraits alone.

"The Nazarene, and Other Poems," is a collection of verse by T. D. Curtis, of Syracuse, "thrown off between the discharge of duties." This is a neat little volume of two hundred pages. The poetry is sensible, well constructed, and has few defects. Considering the strength of his work, it is surprising that the author has not become better known to fame through his muse. He is in every sense a poet, and we wish him the appreciation his merit deserves.

"The Mormon Problem the Nation's Dilemma" is discussed by T. W. Curtis, of New Haven, Conn., in a pamphlet of sixty-two pages just received. It is a plea for justice from the government toward these Latter Day saints, and a discussion of the marriage question generally. It is ably written, and contains many valuable thoughts and figures. Price, 25 cents.

"Saladin," editor of the Secular Review, has written and published a pamphlet entitled, "The Confessional: Romish and Anglican." It is an exposure of the inside workings of the church, which are in all respects diabolical. Some of the book is, for obvious reasons, printed in Latin.

"Bible Romances" and "Bible Contradictions" are the titles of two new pamphlets by G. W. Foote, editor of the London Freethinker. Either is a more valuable commentary on the scriptures than anything ever published by the Bible Society.

"The Liberal Hymn-book," we are glad to note, is increasing in circulation. It is an excellent collection of songs for the use of Liberals in their meetings and in their homes. Price 25 cents.

The Best and Cheapest Home in Marion.

The Best County of Land in Florida.

Eighty, forty, twenty, or ten acres are offered for one half the price put on a section heavily timbered, adjoining north. Mine is cleared; 200 orange-trees, two good houses, and spring near by, of pure water. It will bring double the price now asked for it in one or two years, as the oranges grow and more fruit is set out. See it or write me for particulars. It is one-and-a-half miles from Santos, R. R. town.

W. PERKINS, Ocala, Fla.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED, WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

SABBATH-BREAKING.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

AUTHOR OF "LIFE OF PAINE," "FALSE CLAIMS," "BIBLE MORALS," ETC.

This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view.

LARGE AND HANDSOME PRINT.

The question is discussed under the following heads:

Origin of the Sabbatic Idea—The Jewish Sabbath—The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath—Examination of Sunday Arguments—Origin of Christian Sabbath—Testimony of the Christian Fathers—The Sabbath during the Middle Ages—The Puritan Sabbath—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines—Abrogation of Sunday Laws.

Price, 25 Cents; Six Copies, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

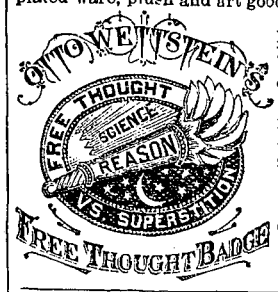
CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adultery and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.



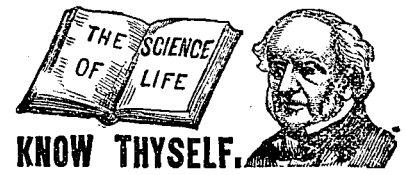
BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Holiday Goods!

All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.



And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3 50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN,
Rochelle, Ill.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. ONLY $1.

BY MAIL POST-PAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cure of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get-up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicine to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisement.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should give the doctor their patronage." 1y8

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days.

Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address W. A. Gilliam, Bellaville, Ashland Co., O.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY

A Collection of Passages

Illustrating the

Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Gems of Thought.

IT is hard to make him seem like a just and loving parent who does so well by some and so ill by hundreds of others.—D. M. Bennett.

NOT only our earth, but the whole solar system as well, has been what it is not at present—had a one time no existence as a system, and will one day cease to exist as such. Time has been when our earth was not yet inhabited by a rational creature, and yet farther back not even by a living creature; nay, a time when it was not as yet contracted to a solid body, when it was not as yet separated from the sun and other planets. But if we contemplate the universe as a whole, there never has been a time when it did not exist, when there did not exist in it a distinction between the heavenly bodies, life, and reason; for all this, if not as yet existing in our part of the cosmos, already existed in another, while in a third it had already ceased to exist. Here it was in the act of blooming, yonder in full flower, at a third place already in decline; but the cosmos itself—the sum total of infinit worlds, in all stages of growth and decay, abode eternally unchanged, in the constancy of its absolute energy, amid the everlasting revolution and mutation of things.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

SECULARISM means belief in this world and the uses of this world, and regards the duties of this world as consisting in seeking happiness through morality, and it measures morality by its conducivness to promote the welfare of others as well as the welfare of the individual. Secularism seeks this welfare by the employment of material means, because these means are most certain, and everybody can employ them. It does not believe in believing; it believes in working. The most ignorant, and idle, and unscrupulous class can excel in believing, but only the intelligent and honest can or will vote for the welfare of themselvs and for others. But the best-intentioned persons will not work with zeal unless they are certain of results, and certainty of result can only be attained by wisely chosen material effort.—G. J. Holyoake.

FROM Shelley's "Address to the Irish People" I select such passages as seem to me most valuable for the light they throw on his own opinions: "All religions are good which make men good, and th way that a person ought to prove that his method o worshiping God is best is for himself to be better than all other men." "A Protestant is my brother aud a Catholic is my brother." "Do not inquire if a man be a heretic, or if he be a Quaker, a Jew, or a heathen; but be he a virtuous man, if he loves liberty and truth, if he wish the happiness and peace of human kind. If a man be ever so much a believer and love not these things, he is a heartless hypocrit, a rascal, and a knave." "It is not a merit to tolerate, but it is a crime to be intolerant." "Anything short of unlimited toleration and complete charity with all men, on which you will recollect that Jesus Christ principally insisted, is wrong." "Be calm, mild, deliberate, patient, ." "Think, and talk, and discuss." "Habits of sobriety, regularity, and thought must be entered into and firmly resolved upon."—Symonds's Shelley.

THE Christian scheme is a complete logical system, compactly fitted together. Its parts all cohere. The dislodgment of one point endangers the security of the structure. To deny the trinity is to deny the deity of the Christ. To deny the deity of the Christ is to deny the sufficiency of his atonement. To deny the atonement is to deny the desperate need of man. To deny this is to deny human depravity, is to deny the necessity of grace, is to vacate the offices of the church, and reduce to nothing the significance of Christendom. The dogma of eternal pun shment is essential to all the rest. It follows logically from the dogmas of depravity and redemption.—Frothingham (Radical Pulpit).

EACH to his taste: we know that there are plenty of people who prefer a count or a baron, impoverished by his dissolute life, to a citizen who has won his way by dint of energy and talent. Our taste is the reverse, and therefore we are also of opinion that mankiud has far more cause for pride if from miserable, brutish beginnings it has gradually, by the incessant labors of countless generations, worked its way up to its present standpoint, than if it is descended from a pair who, created in the image of God, were cast out of paradise, and even now is far from having attained the level from which it originally sank. As nothing is so thoroughly depressing as the certainty of never being able entirely to recover a forfeited advantage, nothing, on the other hand, is so inspiriting to enterprise as to hav a path before us the hight and scope of which it is impossible to foresee.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

BEFORE meals and after I let myself loose from all thoughts, and now would forget that I ever studied. A full mind takes away the body's appetite no less than a full body makes a dull and unwieldy mind. Company, discourse, recreation, are now seasonable and welcome; these prepare me for a diet, not gluttonous, but medicinal; the palate may not be pleased, but the stomach is; nor that for its own sake; neither would I think any of these comforts worth respect in themselvs, but in their use in their end, so far as they may enable me to better things. If I see any dish to tempt my palate, I fear a serpent in that apple, and would please myself in a wilful denial; I rise capable of more, not desirous; not now immediately from my trencher to my book, but after some intermission. Moderate speed is a sure help to all proceedings; when these things which are prosecuted with violence of endeavor or desire, either succeed not or continue not.—Bishop Hall (1574-1656).

THE contemplativ Atheist is rare; a Diagoras, a Bion, and Lucian, perhaps, and some others; and yet they seem to be more than they are; for that all that impugn a received religion or superstition are, by the adverse part, branded with the name of Atheists; but the great Atheists indeed are hypocrits, which are ever handling holy things, but without feeling, so as they must needs be cauterized in the end.—Bacon's Essays.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up. 20 cents.

Sixteen Saviors of None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bibles of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents. cloth, $1.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. R. A. PROCTOR. 20 cents.

Socialism: Reply to Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock. The Professor's sophistries fully exposed. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Superstition; The Religion of Believe or be Damned, an Open Letter to the St. John's School Board. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Containing startling and interesting disclosures about hell, its locality, magnitude, climate, employments, etc. By the Rev. GEO. ROGERS. 15 cents.

The Besant-Hatchard Debate. A two-nights' Debate between Mrs. ANNIE BESANT and Rev. A. HATCHARD on The Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World. Held at the Hall of Science, London, December, 1880. 25 cents.

The Clergyman's Victims. A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By MRS. J. E. BALL. 25 cents.

The Contrast: Evangelicalism and Spiritualism Compared. By MOSES HULL. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

The Darwins. A domestic Radical story. By MRS. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, author of John's Way, Studying the Bible, and numerous essays. 257 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Ghost of St. Johns. By M. BABCOCK. 25 cents.

The New Dispensation; or, The Heavenly Kingdom. By D W. HULL. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. McDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Question Settled. A Careful Comparison of Biblical Modern Spiritualism. By MOSES HULL. Cloth, $1.

The Roaring Lion on the Track. By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

The Philosophy of Spiritualism, and the Philosophy and Treatment of Mediomania. By FREDERIC R. MARVIN, M.D. Cloth, 50 cents.

A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, $1.

Alamontada, the Galley-Slave. Translated from the German of Zschokke by IRA G. MOSHER, LL.B. A deeply philosophical narrativ, intensely interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Beyond the Veil. Claimed to be dictated by the Spirit of Paschal Beverly Randolph, aided by Emanuel Swedenborg, through the mediumship of Mrs. FRANCES H. McDOUGALL and MRS. LUNA HUTCHINSON, with a steel engraving of Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas; Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahveh or Jehovah Shown to be the Worship of the Devil, with observations on the horrible and cruel ordinance of Devil Worship, to wit, Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings. By the Very Rev. EVAN DAVIES (Myfyr Morganwg), D. D., LL.D., Arch-Druid of Great Britain. Translated from the Welsh by MORION, B. C. Price, 25 cents.

Eight Scientific Tracts. 20 cents.

Gottlieb: His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written. By S. P. PUTNAM. 25 cents.

Hereafter. A Scientific, Phenomenal, and Biblical Demonstration of a Future Life. By D. W. HULL. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Issues of the Age. Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. A work showing much study and great familiarity with other writers and thinkers. By HENRY C. PEDDER. Price, $1.

Jesus Christ. His life, miracles, teachings, and imperfections. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

John's Way. A pleasing domestic Radical story. By MRS. E. D. SLENKER. 15 cents.

Odds and Ends.

A SIOUX chief is learning to ride the bicycle, and the final extermination of the aboriginal race is now only a question of time.

THE wages of sin being death, we can't understand why a lot of people don't get paid off at once and hav their services stopped.

SCIENTISTS say that cigaret smoking leads to idiocy, but the impression is gaining ground that the scientists hav got the cart before the horse.

A HARRISBURG man played on an accordion to a crazy man, having heard that the music would soothe and cure. Both player and accordion are in the hospital.

"JULIUS, do you know the tenth commandment?" "Yes'm." "Very well. Recite it." "I can't." "But you said just now you knew it." "Oh! yes. I know it when I see it."

EVANGELIST MOODY has denounced church-fairs because he read that at a recent one they permitted men to kiss the girls at twenty-five cents a kiss. Moody is right. They ought to hav charged a dollar.

MR. ISAACSTEIN: "My frent, I sells you dot goat for seventeen tollar und a ca-vorter, und I vill never dake a cent less."

Customer: "What's the quarter for?"

Mr. Isaacstein: "Vot's dat ca-vorter for? Dot's my profit on de goat. You tink I can subbort a family und giv dot goods avay?"

LONGFELLOW and Fields were making a short pedestrian tour some years ago, when, to their surprise, an angry bull stood in the pathway, evidently determined to demolish both poet and publisher. "I think," said Fields, "that it will be prudent to giv this reviewer a wide margin." "Yes," replied the poet, "it appears to be a disputed passage."

MINISTER'S wife (looking over the paper): "You are referred to in this morning's paper, my dear, as 'a distinguished clergyman.'"

Minister: "H'm. I thought that my sermon yesterday would attract attention. Is it published in full or only a synopsis given?"

Wife: "Neither. You are spoken of as 'a distinguished clergyman' in connection with that patent medicin testimonial you sent to Dr. Quack."

"PA," said Bobby, who had been allowed to sit up a little while after dinner with the distinct understanding that he was to ask no foolish questions, "can God do everything?" "Yes." "Can he make a two-foot rule with only one end to it?" "One more such question," said the old man, "and you will be packed off to bed." Bobby nodded sleepily for ten minutes and then asked, "Pa, can a camel go seven days without water?" "Yes." "Well, how many days could he go if he had water?" The next thing Bobby knew he was in bed.

IN the course of a parody of Lord Tennyson's latest poem, "Vastness," occur these declarations:

"Raving editors, never at rest, and never letting contributors be—
What is it all but a clamor for millions of billions of trillions of rhymes from me?

"Rhymes to this word, rhymes to that word, poems enough to fill the Times.
Thousands of publishers yelling to me for a popular torrent of rhymes upon rhymes.

. . . . . .

"Life is a hurry and bustle for poets exactly as if they were commonplace men;
Truly, whenever they publish nonseuse, they're sure to be called on to do it again.

. . . . . .

"What the facility, what the rapidity, what the fertility misunderstood?
What the true poetry lost in the meaningless, much that is rubbish, and little that's good?

"What is it all, if they all of them only want something that poetry might hav been;
Scribbled with Fastness, lost in dullness, drowned in the deeps of a cheap magazine?"

"HE THAT BELIEVETH NOT SHALL BE DAMNED."

The unparsable gentleman known as the Rev. Sam Jones preached a sermon in St. Louis a few days ago, in which he said that any man who did not "ask a blessing before his dinner was eleventenths a hog."

He also said: "When any man tells me he don't believe the Bible, I don't argue with him. I never spent five minutes in my life arguing with a dog—and I never spent five minutes thought on whether the Bible is true or not."

He then preached a sermon on "Prisoners Without Hope," in which he turned us all over to the devil who were inclined to spend more than five minutes on a book before accepting its entire contents as absolutely correct, whereupon a friend scribbled the following lines on a piece of paper and handed it to me. I do not know whether you think they will do justice to your "Odds and Ends" column or not. If not, they will ornament your waste-basket, I am sure:

In the good old days gone by,
When angels and witches ate figs,
The jay birds lifted the heaviest weights,
And elephants perched on twigs;
The hippopotamus flew,
Or sang to his charming mate,
While Moses and God planned their new campaign
As they swung on the garden gate.

When seasons were hot and dry
And famin assailed each door,
This all-wise God, with a wink and a nod,
Rained bugs and frogs galore;
And nothing tickled him more,
His sense of humor was such,
Than to answer prayer to the good and rare
By drowning them out with too much.

The asses and snakes all talked,
And men often swallowed whales
While the fish ate with forks in the middle of the day,
And the cotton grew in bales;
Camelopards grew on trees
And churches were always jammed;
The angels chewed tobacco in those rare good old days—
Believe it all or be damned.

H. H. G.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 51. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, December 19. 1885 | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

GERMANY devotes 9,000,000 acres to the cultivation of the potato. The yield last year was 23,000,000 tons.

THE population of Oregon, according to the county assessors, is 204,000, being an increase of 28,800 since 1880.

J. B. MANNIX assignee of the estate of Archbishop Purcell, has misappropriated by speculating in stocks some $200,000 of the assets.

AN octogenarian attendant at the recent English Church Congress said that he had only heard one sermon against war in all his life.

A REEF known as the Culaberas, sixty miles from Tonga Island, in the South Pacific, has become an activ volcano three hundred feet high.

THE Tories in the British Parliament are reported to be greatly scandalized because some of the members recently elected are working men.

IT is believed that in ten years Yankton, D T., will be an inland town. In front of the city, where the river ran twenty feet deep five years ago, there are now one hundred acres of land six feet above high water mark.

MR. SHAW-LEFEVRE, ex-postmaster-general, said lately that there are a million of children in England who do not attend school by reason of the poverty of their parents. It may be added that in half of these cases drink is the cause of it.

MINISTER'S wife: "Are you going out this morning, Henry?" Minister: "Yes, I guess I'll take a stroll down to the public library." Minister's wife: "Then you'll want your large overcoat, won't you? It's a good thing I mended those pockets."

THE other day a man wanted to bet that a half dozen men could not be found in Waycross who knew which was the fourth commandment. On passing the question around it was answered in ten different ways, and only one was right.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

THE Duke of Somerset, who died a few days ago at the age of eighty-one, was a noted Infidel. He was the author of a work entitled, "Christian Theology and Modern Skepticism," in which he contended that the mandate, "Search the scriptures," had "undone the world."

FIVE barbers were fined by a police magistrate in Ottawa, Ont., on the 26th ult., for profanation of the Sabbath by following their calling on that day. The magistrate said that printers and telegraph operators, unless working for the government, were liable to a similar penalty.

WEIMAR, in Germany, intends to persecute the pianists with the utmost rigor of the law. An edict has just been issued forbidding the players of pianos to hav their windows open while playing, under penalty of a fine. Any person who givs a reunion musicale must pay a fine of fifty marks.

"THERE is no room to doubt that the influence of devotion to the study of the physical sciences upon an undevout mind tends to Materialism. Materialism is another name for Atheism.—Christian Advocate. This is equivalent to admitting that education is destructiv of superstition, Christian or otherwise.

THE emperor of Germany, who makes unctuous speeches declaring that religion is all-in-all to him, deems it consistent therewith to tear from their homes in winter women on the eve of childbirth, and paralytic old men, and pack them over the frontier for no other cause than that they were born Poles. He is thus responsible for the death of dozens.

IN a letter to the Medical Record, Prof. A. Sabetti, S. J., states in regard to the operation of craniotomy—in which the unborn child is destroyed in order to save the life of the mother—that all Catholics are bound in conscience to admit its sinfulness, and that anyone who performs it knowingly "incurs the guilt of homicide." The opinion is based upon decisions of the Holy Office of the Inquisition at Rome.

AN object of public curiosity, near New Philadelphia, Ohio, is a man who never shears the wool from his sheep, or plucks his geese, or "rings" his swine. He says it is sinful to interfere with nature. His own hair and beard are never shorn, nor are his nails cut. Every utensil about the farm is home-made.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal tells of a remarkable result of the use of steam as a disinfectant of ships. The vessel to be treated was made tight fore and aft, and the steam turned on for the requisit time. The hold was found to be in good condition after the cleansing, and the disinfectors entered the cabin. But here they discovered that the fine furniture and cabinet work had fallen apart and lay in a comprehensiv heap on the floor. The steam had melted the glue.

As almost every member of the English cabinet is a peer or a relativ of one, it may be interesting to see what peers and their relativs hav received from the state between 1859 and 1884. Dukes, £9,760,000; marquises, £8,305,950; earls £48,181,202. These are large sums, and no ten thousand families of those who are not peers hav received one hundredth part of the amount. It may be an excellent plan that the executiv should be in the hands of the aristocracy, but cheap it is not. These Brahmans know how to take care of themselvs and their relativs.

"UNCLE RASTUS," said an Episcopal minister, "did you look over the prayer-book I gave you last week?" "Yes, sah." "Well, what do you think about joining the church?" "I 'spec's I can't affo'd it, sah." "Can't afford it?" "No, sah. Yo' sees, sah, dere's one pa't ob de service wha' it says on ebbery page, 'Collect fo' de day.' I don' min' chippin' in a nickel fo' 'ligun once a Sunday, but I hain't like rich folks what kin keep goin' in an' outten dey're pocket fru de hull service. I guess I'll jine de Baptis' chu'ch, sah; it's cheaper dan de 'Piscopal."

CANOGA, Seneca county, N. Y., was thrown into great excitement on the 11th inst. by the death of Lott Schaw, aged about twenty-three years. His death is attributed to religious excitement produced at a revival meeting held at the Methodist Episcopal church, Canoga, Sunday, Nov. 29th. The projector of the meeting exhorted the young man till after midnight to accept religion, and the youth was finally carried home a raving maniac. Since then he had spasms, in which he jumped up and shouted, and fell back stiff and senseless. In one of these paroxysms he died. His parents are said to hav been weak-minded.

THE twelve children of the late A. B. Fox, of Gowanda, N. Y., none of whom is less than 6 feet high, the lightest one weighing 256 pounds, are to hav a reunion. Their parents lived together sixty years, their father dying at the age of eighty, and his widow the next day, at the same age. Old Mr. Fox was 6 feet 2 inches high, and weighed 250 pounds. His wife was 6 feet 1 inch, and weighed 200 pounds. The twelve children are all married, and each one has six children. One of these, aged seventeen years, is 6 feet 3 inches high. There are two years between the ages of the twelve children, and the same difference between the ages of all their children.

A COMPARATIV table of the strength of the merchant navies of the world, which has just been published in France, shows that Great Britain possesses 22,500 trading vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 11,200,000 tons. Of these vessels, 4,649 are steamers, with a tonnage of 5,919,000 tons, or rather more than one-half the grand total of burden. The United States makes a very bad second, with 6,600 sail and 2,700,000 tons. Norway has 4,200 vessels, with 1,500,000 tons, and Germany, which comes immediately after her, has 3,000 sail, with a total of 1,400,000 tons; France, Italy, and Russia bring up the rear, each with less than 3,000 vessels. The proportion of steamers is, however, of greater importance than the total number of ships engaged in trade, and in this regard France stands second, although she has but 458 steamers of 667,000 tons in all, to England's 4,649. Germany presses her closely with 420 steamers and 476,000 tons.

FROM time immemorial pickled cabbage has been denounced by doctors as outrageously indigestible. Of late, however, that dietetic preparation has grown to be quite respectable. It has risen to the dignity of an alkaloid producer. M. Tuyapogu has isolated the substance, and finds that it suppresses the delirium due to a prolonged use of alcohol. So the whisky seller, in placing pickled cabbage upon his lunch table, has been for years unconsciously engaged in providing his guests with proper scientific treatment.

WHAT is human greatness? inquires the Chicago News. Here was William H. Vanderbilt, the richest man on the American continent; he dies suddenly, and the obituary editor is told to write him up. Where are the data to be had? Neither the "American Encyclopedia," nor "Appleton's Annual," nor "Men of our Times," nor the "Biographical Dictionary," nor the "Domestic Encyclopedia," nor the "Dictionary of Universal Biography," nor "Famous Americans," by Parton, nor Harper's publications for the last ten years—none of these works contains a line about William H. Vanderbilt! Yet what a hold this man had on the railway system in this country! How vast was his influence in business circles! But, cruel iconoclasts that they are, the bookmakers and biography writers never saw him. His millions couldn't get him a place between the covers of a cyclopedia.

THE Sun of December 11th says: "The Catholics of Rhode Island, like their brethren of New York, are contending for freedom of worship in the institutions supported by the state, and in both cases, it seems to us, they hav the right on their side, so long as any religious worship is conducted in such establishments. In his address before the annual convention of the Catholic Temperance Union of Providence the other day, Father Burns, the president, spoke forcibly against the persistent violation of the article of the State Constitution which provides that 'no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever, except in fulfilment of his own voluntary contract.' In the face of that explicit declaration, said Father Burns, 'The Catholic people of this state are obliged to contribute to the support of a Protestant minister, who is employed to conduct a worship and to preach a doctrin which they believe to be false and heretical.' In the State Prison and House of Correction Protestant services are conducted every Sunday, while the mass is permitted on only one Sunday in the month, and 'the Protestant minister is paid out of the treasury of the state $1,400 a year, and has also the use of a horse for himself and family without charge, while the Catholic priest is paid absolutely nothing.' Besides, the Catholic inmates of the correctional and reformatory institutions are 'compelled to attend the services so conducted.' The Constitution is thus violated, continued Father Burns, although the Catholics of the state hav become so numerous and are increasing so rapidly that 'Rhode Island is likely to be the first state in the Union to hav a majority of its electors of Roman Catholic creed, and the property qualification for foreign voters will not long operate to prevent such a result.' The Protestants may hav the upper hand now, but the day is not far off when the Catholics will hav the superiority. That is a warning to which Protestants outside of Rhode Island may well giv heed. The Catholics in all the manufacturing states especially are increasing at a more rapid rate than the Protestants, so that the day may come when the agitation for freedom of worship will be on the Protestant side. Is it not very dangerous for the Protestants to be establishing precedents which can so easily be used against them? The only logical ground to take against the Catholics in this matter is one which shocks the clerical opponents of the Freedom of Worship bill. It is that consistently there can be no religious worship or instruction in the public institutions, since we hav no state religion to inculcate. Until the enemies of the bill consent to take that position squarely, and in the face of all its consequences, they are bound to be beaten by the Catholics in the argument."

News of the Week.

THE Grant monument fund has been increased to over $104,000.

THE mayor of Louisville, Ky., has just been fined for disorderly conduct.

QUEEN VICTORIA has donated $2,500 to the fund to relieve the wounded Bulgarians.

THE public library of Chicago, Ill., has just received a bequest of $2,500,000 through the death of Mrs. Julia Newberry.

THE Rev. Mr. Charles McLain is being investigated by a Presbytery at St. Paul, Minn. He is charged with deception, forgery, fraud, and other clerical conduct.

W. C. WALKER, a theological student at Meadville, Pa., shot himself dead last week. He left a note for his mother, saying that he believed God would forgiv him.

THE funeral of Louis Riel, the Canadian rebel leader, took place last Saturday at St. Boniface. The ceremonies were Catholic Many masses hav been said for the repose of Mr. Riel's soul.

Two clergymen of Buchanan, Va., the Rev. Mr. Myers and the Rev. Mr. Cooper, are under indictment for fighting each other. The Rev Mr. Myers smashed the Rev. Mr. Cooper on the head with a chair.

THE Rev. Dr. McLain, formerly pastor of a Presbyterian church in St. Paul, has for some time been on exhibition in a dime museum as a mesmerist. Last week he called a visitor a "damned liar," and the museum manager deposed him.

THE surviving partners of the late William E. Dodge, the pious gentleman who defrauded the government and has a public monument, hav been sued for damages for alleged false representations made by Dodge while alive. The damages are laid at $18,000.

SEVERAL bodies hav been incinerated during the past week at the Fresh Pond, Long Island, crematory. Some complaint is made that gases escape from the furnace during the incineration. The managers say that all gases are burnt before they reach the top of the chimney.

B. GRATZ BROWN, who was nominated for vice-president on the Greeley ticket in 1872, died of heart disease at St. Louis, Mo., on the 13th. He was fifty-nine years old. Mr. Brown had been an editor, a United States Senator, and the governor of Missouri. He was a Free Trade Democrat. He was quite wealthy until fifteen years ago, when he met with reverses. Since his defeat in politics he had devoted himself to the practice of the law. He leaves a widow and nine children.

A CHURCH council at Newburgh, N. Y., having examined some charges against the Rev. M. L. Ferris, Baptist, almost unanimously adopted resolutions expressing their utter abhorrence of his conduct as a man and a minister, and declaring they believe him utterly unworthy to fill a Christian pulpit. They warn all churches against him as a man who is only in the ministry of the Baptist denomination because a church has been misled into following him into separation from the association, and thus shielded him from deposition from the ministry, which, by his own persistent wrongdoing, he deserves.

W. H. VANDERBILT, who died last week, was worth $200,000,000. His will has been admitted to probate. The sum of $40,000.000 is left in trust for his children and $42,000,000 are given to them absolutely. Mrs. Vanderbilt gets the use of the deceased millionaire's house for life and an income of $200,000 a year. Various bequests, large and small, are made, including $2,500,000 for various religious, charitable, and benevolent purposes The only conspicuous charities which Vanderbilt is known to hav indulged in while living were a half million given to a medical college, $150,000 toward bringing the obelisk from Egypt to Central Park, and $100,000 to a theological seminary. There were religious services at his funeral, and the choir sang "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

Communications.

The Later Phases of Socialism.

These two works* are something new and solid in social speculation. They are from two venerable Americans who are federal republicans, and who do not propose to haul down the stars and stripes before the red flag or any other flag. The only country that has as yet succeeded in getting partially emancipated from kings, aristocracies, and standing armies—the only country that has a chance, therefore, in which liberty and social ideas can be realized—is the republic called into existence by the pen of Paine and the sword of Washington. The European Socialists will hav to wait until they hav a federal United States of Europe before they can hope to do more than to whisper, dream, and suffer. The armies of Europe must be disbanded or taken out of the control of its despots by political changes before social progress can make headway there. Politics and economics must be worked out together, and only where the republic has been achieved. America has been, and ought therefore to be now, more than ever before the land of true social progress. The exertion of founding and establishing our republic, followed by the great antislavery movement, and the consequent civil war, are the chief reasons why speculations of this character, always rife, hav not more often "taken the name of action." Still the Shakers, the Fourierite movements, the Brook Farm, and the many societies whose stories hav been preserved by Noyes and Nordhoff, show full well that the dream of co-operation is the next idea sure to rise in the great, and finally emancipated, land of liberty.

Now first sure to rise, for by the abolition of slavery we are in a condition to proceed in the attempts to realize our social utopias.

There was something sublimely inconsistent in the position of the great "Democrats," John C. Calhoun and Charles O'Conor, standing before the American people and proclaiming that slavery was the only way in which justice could be rendered to the laborers, and further that the "divine institution" was the only bulwark of society against crushing social and economic innovations. As Mr. Ingalls points out, Calhoun "foresaw, and correctly foretold, that the abolition of slavery would lead directly to the conflict between labor and capital which now confronts us" (p. 30). His point was that slavery had originally built up civilization, and was far more just and justifiable than the wages slavery, which took what was good out of a man, and then threw him away to starve, while the products of his labor were accumulated by soulless capitalists or corporations. The men and women of head and heart were not likely to rest under chattel slavery, and it has disappeared only to bring the wages system under violent criticism. The air is full of labor unions, socialisms, and projects of colonies, societies, and reforms, the object of which is to replace or supplement the laws of wages and competition by the laws of co-operation, prudence, and equity. These two books now in hand are remarkable in that they come from "grave and reverend seigniors," with white and flowing beards, which make them resemble "Father Time," from whom our "Rational Communist" claims to be inspired. More strange still, both are retired capitalists, living upon the proceeds of a system they are frank enough to tell the world ought to giv way to a better.

Mr. Ingalls is well known as the veteran of our land reformers. He insists upon beginning with our artificial and unjust land-tenure as the wicked foundation of rent, usury, and unjust taxation of every kind. He insists upon a return to the original and natural tenure of land, viz., occupancy and use.

It will surprise those who hav not followed the subject with Mr. Ingalls to learn from his book how manifold are the robberies that result from the metaphysical instead of the actual occupancy tenure of the soil. He shows (page 281) that though the value of capital in industrial enterprises may exceed the value of the lands of a country, yet that all of the "exploitations" of capital rest upon the primal one of estates in land separated from its occupation. For instance, "without a power to monopolize the coal-lands our coal monopolies could not exist;" the transportation monopolies thrive because of a monopoly based upon the road-bed and termini. The landlord, capitalist, and the state combine to rob labor. though they may sometimes wrangle about the division of the spoils, "which they call rent, interest, taxes, and profits."

How cunningly all this robbery is brought about Mr. Ingalls's book is written to show, and I shall be glad to hav some one point out wherein he is mistaken. The first step toward social wealth and social justice, he shows, is a return to a use of the soil as the only title to it, the breaking up of large estates and of abstract or paper titles, and the consequent abolition of rents and usury. He has a very important chapter of suggestions to legislators as to the needful legislation to accomplish this fundamental reform. Mr. Ingalls gives our orthodox political economists short shrift, nor does he hesitate to giv Mr. Henry George and Mr. Edward Clarke a very decided knowledge of their shortcomings.

We hav said enough to show the very great interest this work has for reformers and thinking people, as a practical step in sociology.

Mr. Ingalls's land reforms naturally lead up to our "RATIONAL COMMUNIST." He pursues the subject upon the broader plain of socialization not only of the land, but of all of the means and the results of production. He differs from all the Communists we hav read or heard before, in showing how to be rational. He has "Father Time," with flowing beard and venerable form, bring before us our own city and state of New York, and the United States transformed into a Communistic or Socialistic Commonwealths. This is rational, for if this thing is to be done it is high time that some one should show how it can be done; and, of all others, Father Time is just the one to do that very thing. The place where to do it, too, is just here in America, not in some Island Atlantis, or Utopia, or Erehwon (Nowhere), or Holmes's Hole, to be entered by the North Pole.

We hav a vision in this book, therefore, of the transformed United States looking up under the wand of Time like a Paradise. Yet it all comes to light under the American Flag, and from and out of the actual means, institutions, circumstances, men, women, laws, and motivs which now exist. All this comes, too, only by the gradual operation and evolution of causes which move us every day.

We shall not try to transfer this vision to the reader, for that would be to spoil it. It is a practical picture worked out by a practical man, and he is to be congratulated upon his success. At least one man has been able to show how Communism can be worked out in a large country and in detail.

Happy the man who can thus in his old age reverence the dream of his youth, and transmit it to others to be reverenced until it may be realized! To the rising generation he sends words of cheer and hope. 'This is not all a dream; it is guaranteed by the law of evolution itself; it is inherent in the moral nature of man; it springs out of the necessity of co-operation, the elimination of waste, and the prevention of the misery which all must suffer as long as it is suffered by even a few. The human will counts for something in the order of human events, and it must control those events for the common welfare more and more. Organize and co-operate, therefore, until your community, and finally the whole family of nations, shall become a social circle, an international co-operation based upon the realization of the brotherhood of man in every land and clime.'

Such is the spirit and inspiration that rises from his pages. Alas! that Father Time is the only one likely to see anything like this vision realized!

But in order to clear the way, our Rational Communist improves the interim by throwing over into the limbo of vanity the various obstructors who stand in the way of its realization, especially the orthodox political economists, the laissez-faire people, and particularly Mr. Herbert Spencer. This last and most unfortunate of the philosophers receives the roughest buffetings at the hands of old "Father Time." He is charged with leaving out the human will, conscious effort, and, therefore, all morality from social evolution. Father Time shows how that he has been at work for ages to get these very faculties to blossom out as the glory of human nature, and now comes a man who is vaunted as the great social philosopher of England and omits just these all-important factors! Father Time admonishes Herbert that silence becomes a man who "proposes nothing." The sociology which has no prevision nor provision, in a word, no Socialism of any kind, is a barren science which deserves only contempt. By omitting the direct conscious action of the moral faculties upon the world and human progress, he has made evolution a blind and "beastly" process. These are also in substance the objections which Mr. Frederic Harrison, and the Humanitarians generally, hav taken to the Spencerian philosophy, and which seem fatal to it, until they are to be obviated by some future work of that philosopher.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Spencer will, in completing his philosophy, crown it with a practical moral republican polity which will bring it into harmony with the moral sense of the advanced peoples of the world. Else it will remain throughout all time a sort of devil's Bible, as if inspired by Mephistopheles. How necessary it is that this should not be the result of Mr. Spencer's career no one has made more apparent than our Rational Communist.

New York, Nov. 15, 285. T. B. WAKEMAN.

---

*SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J. K. INGALLS. Price, $1.00. New York: The Truth Seeker Company.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM: The Present and the Future Republic of North America. By a Capitalist. Price, $1.50. New York: The Truth Seeker Company.

FORTY years ago 93 per cent of all marriages in England and Wales took place in the churches of the Establishment. Last year, according to the report of the registrar general, the proportion of marriages elsewhere than in the churches had risen from 7 to 30 per cent.

Where the Money Went.

A corporation in Flint, Michigan, has been operating a saw-mill for just twenty years, but has now closed in consequence of the exhaustion of pine. It is stated that this corporation has cut 160,000,000 feet of lumber and paid $360,000 out for wages. It is not stated how much they sold their lumber for, but probably not less than an average price of $15 per thousand feet. This would make a total of $2,400,000, a sum nearly seven times as great as that paid for wages. The corporation consisted of three men, none of whom could hire out for more than $1,000 a year—perhaps not more than one-half of that sum. Suppose we allow them for wages $50,000; and suppose we allow the mill to hav cost $150,000 during that time, and that the government sold the pine lands for $10,000—a high estimate. We then get the following figures:

Cost of pine and land,	$ 10,000
Cost of mill,	150,000
Cost of superintendence,	50.000
Wages to laborers,	360.000
Total outlay,	570.000
160,000,000 feet of lumber at $15 per 1,000,	2,400,000
Net profit to corporation,	1,830,000

In addition to this, the corporation still own the land, which we will suppose is now worth five times the sum paid to the government for it, or $50,000, making a net profit of $1,880,000.

It is not pretended that the above figures are absolutely correct, but they are near enough so for all practical purposes, and will serve to illustrate the work of corporations generally.

What would we think of a farmer who would sell a field of wheat to his neighbor, and then, after it was cut and threshed out, buy the wheat back at a price, after allowing for the expenses of cutting and threshing, seven times greater than he sold it for? Would we not call such a man a fool? Yet this is just what the people of the United States hav been doing with their pine timber. They hav sold it to corporations and then bought the lumber back at a price, after paying all the expenses of converting it into lumber, seven times greater than we sold it for, after adding all the expenses of converting it into lumber.

And these are the corporations which for more than twenty years hav been corrupting our members of Congress to get them to pass "protection (?) laws" to enable them to demand a higher price for lumber on the pretense that it was necessary to enable them to pay higher wages to their employees. We now see that they could hav afforded to pay five times the wages they did and still come off with a good profit themselvs. Or they could hav sold their lumber at one-fifth the price they did and still had a fair profit.

This is why Michigan is full of men who hav to be kept from starving every winter by public charity. If the nearly $2,000,000 given to three men had been divided equally among the fifty laborers, very few of them to-day would be paupers.

How could this evil be remedied? It would hav been much better if we had not put a tariff on foreign lumber, for then poor people could hav got cheaper lumber, and cheaper lumber means more and better homes. The corporation would hav made less and the rest of us would hav had less to pay and been proportionately better off.

But this would hav been only a partial remedy. The true remedy is not to sell either the timber or the land to corporations. The government might hav let contracts of cutting lumber, so many millions of feet at a time, to the highest bidder, and then sold the same at depots at all business centers at the cost of manufacture and sale. Had this been done, how many families to-day would be living in homes of their own instead of miserable rented houses!

J. G. MALCOLM.

The Instruments of Free Exchange.

The true question is, not that of a gold, nor of a silver, nor of a double standard, but of the expediency of putting money under the control of legislation.

Nature affords no absolute standard of values, but without the intervention of government individuals may contract for exchange of any specified values for a particular occasion. Is any money necessary for such exchanges? Merchants dispense with money by bills of exchange. The extension of this method to all kinds of business is feasible, on the same terms of enlightened probity. Labor exchange banks hav been devised to facilitate this process. The notes of such banks may be either certificates of values delivered and held in deposit, or of certain kinds and amounts of labor to be rendered on demand. If not too ambitious of doing a large business, but confining their transactions to an organized local autonomy, the sooner such banks are instituted the better for all honest people. The decent way of withdrawing government from a dangerous meddling with production and exchange will be by having it put the official stamp on certain weights of the precious metals of a given and constant rate of purity, but letting the amount of this coinage be regulated, just as the sale of postal stamps, by individual demand, as our gold coinage now is. Then remove all prohibitions to the issue of honest currency by private banks, so that the official coinage shall hav no force of law added to its inherent virtue in controling production and exchange. If the precious metals are shown to control these naturally, and yet inconveniences result therefrom, men submit without caviling to evils inherent in the nature of things, and not arbitrarily imposed upon them. Genius invents or discovers means of obviating natural difficulties, but genius is impotent before the legislation of authority. That is a Gordian knot which only the sword can loose. It is too much to expect that intelligence shall submit to hav production and exchange locked up, and the arteries of commerce blocked by prohibitory financial legislation, or the arbitrary action of a secretary of the treasury, who sequestrates specie and refrains from paying off debts.

Our actual finance laws are prohibitory. They fix a standard of value, not only for existing public debt, but for all buying and selling, and then limit the supply of money. This is as though government should first fix the length of the yardstick, then fix on a very scarce kind of wood from which yardsticks must be made, except a certain number, which may be made of another wood not quite so scarce, but only if government buy this wood and make them, and finally hav its officers lock them up, lest there be too many yardsticks.

State Socialists boast of the mails as proving the aptitude of government for economic management. Our post-office department does not pay its expenses. Our express companies doing the same kind of business make profits on it. China, with eight times our population, gets its mailage done to general satisfaction by private enterprise.

Gold or silver dollars, or deposited bonds and mortgages, or credited certificates of labor, whether concrete in produce or dynamic in capacity, would, under the same securities as at present, be just as real, just as valuable (while more available), without prohibitions, as the privileged dollars of our mint.

Financial freedom does not exist. It is distrusted, like free trade. Between gold-bugs and the advocates of the silver viceroyalty, the difference is as small as between the protectionist who excludes foreign built ships, and those commercial Liberals who whittled down the demand for free shipping to the admission of very large vessels built abroad, but owned by Americans and sailed only by Americans under the United States flag, and exclusivly in our foreign trade.

Even this has been denied by government, and consistently; for are not ships instruments of exchange as well as money is? It is the freedom of exchange that government prohibits and curtails in favor of monopolists.

Modern United States statesmanship is simply a string of prohibitions upon productions and exchange. No wonder men are idle that are anxious to work. It looks as though the genius of despotism were avenging itself through our representativ system, for infraction by our Declaration of Independence.—J. L. Walker and Edgeworth (substantially from the Galveston News).

Our London Letter.

The parliamentary elections hav so engaged the attention of the members of the press that the article in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, entitled "The Dawn of Creation and of Worship," written in reply to Dr. Reville's "Prolegomena to the History of Religions," has met with but scant notice in the general newspapers, though probably it may be noticed in future issues of those magazines that admit into their columns of subjects this description.

The different Freethought organs hav, however, examined Gladstone's paper, and hav fully shown up its weaknesses. It certainly does seem somewhat strange that a man reputed to possess mental powers much above the common run of mortals should commit himself to what is so extremely nonsensical; but I think it will be often seen that statesmen who hav made a considerable mark in their time are by no means close or logical reasoners; but this may be to a certain extent accounted for by their frequent use of diplomatic language, which is frequently merely a euphemism for lying, and eventually their thoughts follow their words, and the mind becomes so distorted that they get into the habit of sophistical reasoning; and this habit becomes so firmly implanted that even when writing on or discussing subjects in no way connected with politics, it still clings to them and cannot be got rid of.

Gladstone may perhaps believe what he has written, and probably has persuaded himself that it is true; but even if it were not so, it would not answer his purpose to dispute any portion of a creed which has been so profitable to him and his family. The fact of one of his sons holding one of the richest livings in England has doubtless a very considerable effect upon him, and therefore he cannot see his way to even suggest such a drastic measure as the extreme members of his party propose, viz., disestablishment and disendowment. It was quite right and proper to disestablish the Irish church, but then he was not pecuniarily interested in that, and the movement brought him great credit; but when it comes so near home, he finds that the Established Church is not so very corrupt after all, and will quickly amend any ways that are found to be at all objectionable.

The Church Defense Association is publishing pamphlets innumerable to show what a wicked act is contemplated, and it is gravely asserted that the Church of England does not take, and never has taken, a single penny from the state; in fact, as the church is many centuries older than the state, everything really belongs to the church, and it is extremely generous in allowing the state to possess anything at all. I fancy such reasoning rather overshoots the mark, and those interested in keeping things as they now are may hav occasion to pray to be saved from their friends, as such absurd statements must be rather too much for any sane individual to swallow. It is very much of a satire on the faith of the clergy, when it is seen how very little they believe in it themselvs; they hav a great dread of trusting in their deity to feed and clothe them, should their incomes be taken away from them. They much prefer the hard cash to taking their chance of what will be sent them from above. They know full well if they did this they would hav to go on rather short commons most days, but many would be able to leave for their heirs such an amount of money—£85,000, as the late bishop of Manchester did.

A few days will now decide whether Charles Bradlaugh will be once more elected by his constituents to represent them in the next parliament. There seems to be a diversity of opinion whether he can take his seat in the same manner as other members. It will be well that he is able to do so, as he is a man imbued with strong principles mostly for the good of the community; and being a powerful and clever orator, his speeches are always worth hearing and reading. But for the unfortunate hitch that occurred in the last Parliament, he would hav made a splendid name for himself, and hav been by this time far better able to take a prominent part in forming a strong Radical party in the House of Commons. As might be expected, his time is now so taken up with political matters that he has been to a great extent compelled to neglect the advocacy of Freethought, which course has somewhat alienated the good feeling of some of his former friends, who consider that he should hav kept to his first love; but this is a matter of opinion. It is clear, however, that he cannot do proper justice to either while attempting to do both. When he is fairly admitted into the House, and meets with none of the opposition to which he has been exposed so long, he will hav more time at his disposal, which it is to be hoped he will devote to assailing superstition. J. D.

London, Eng., Nov. 23, 1885.

Opening the Crematory.

ATHEIST EUGENE LIEVRE'S BODY BURNT AT FRESH POND, L. I.

Sunlight glittered on the unfurnished front of the crematory at Fresh Pond, L. I., on Friday, December 4th, when about a hundred persons gathered to see the body of Atheist Eugene Lievre, enveloped in its shroud of alum-saturated cloth, and resting in its chilled Norway iron cradle, enter a retort registering 2,500 Fahrenheit degrees of heat.

From the huge iron band that tops the chimney in the rear of the building, and which makes the whole structure look somewhat like a locomotiv with a demolished cab, feathery clouds of sooty smoke ascended at intervals, and told the villagers that Superintendent Merriam and Expert William Bermsderfer, of the Lancaster crematory, were forcing the fires to hav the heat up in the thousands at 2:30 in the afternoon, when Lievre's body was to arrive from Greenwood Cemetery, where it has lain embalmed in a vault for three weeks.

A few minutes before 2 o'clock horses with mourning trappings, drawing a hearse, from which nodded black plumes, and a single carriage containing the dead man's son, ascended the hill and entered the crematory grounds.

Professor Eames, under whose directions the furnace and retorts were built, was present to witness the result of his changes from the original plans. At first it was intended to build the furnaces and retorts in the basement where only the employees of the crematory could witness the incineration. A hollow catafalque was to be built in the auditorium above. It was intended to place the coffin containing the body in the catafalque, throw a pall over it, and, during the funeral services, it was to be noiselessly lowered through the hollow catafalque to the furnace room below. The pall would still keep the shape of the catafalque, and the relativs would be relieved from unpleasant thoughts at the time the body was being put into the retort. The directors of the company learned that the relativs of the forty or more dead persons awaiting incineration objected to such a plan. It is said that some of them threatened to bury the bodies, which had been in the Second street, Greenwood, Cypress Hills, and other cemetery vaults, unless the plans were changed, and the relativs permitted to see the body go into the retort. They wanted to be sure that they got the right ashes. Accordingly, the furnaces were placed on the ground floor, with the doors of the retorts opening into the auditorium.

The coffin was then carried to the reception room, and again, having the pine-box for a bier, it was opened. The body had been embalmed, and the odor from it was hardly perceptible. It was dressed in black, and showed Mr. Lievre to hav been large and powerfully built, and about six feet tall. The body weighed about 185 pounds. Five yards of white muslin had been saturated in a solution of alum. This prevents the clothing of the body from burning while it is shoved into the retort. The alum sheet also should retain its shape about the body until it is entirely incinerated, when the administration of a current of air to bleach the ashes crumbles it like the fabled Dead Sea apple. The body was enveloped in the sheet and placed in the cradle, which rested on the cement floor. The cradle was then placed upon the rolling bier and rolled into the auditorium and before the door of the retort. The mica peep-holes showed that a fierce white heat was raging inside. At 3:15 as expert Bermsderfer slowly opened the door there was a hush broken by the sobs of Lievre's relativs, and as the inside of the retort slowly became visible blue white flames crept out from the top of the opening and shot up above the door.

The crematory assistants, with long iron poles, pushed the cradle in, and the tongues of flames shot through the hundreds of holes on the top and sides of the retort. The retort door was quickly closed. The last seen of Lievre's body showed it enveloped in fierce flames on every side.

The relativs and others took turns looking through the mica peep-holes, and the directors and stockholders watched the progress of the incineration until after nightfall. It was then decided not to open the door of the retort until next morning. The relativs and friends lingered for a long time in the auditorium, and took away with them bunches of the smilax that had been around the coffin. Adolph Lievre said it was his father's dying wish that no clergyman should officiate at his funeral. He also requested to be cremated.

Louis C. Knickman, John G. Scheper, Judge Francis McKenna, and John Heeg, of the Newtown Board of Health, were present at the incineration. They did not in any way interfere with it, as it had been intimated they would. They decided that it came under the statute applying to bone-burning.

According to a rule of the company, the coffin and pine box which held Lievre's body were burnt at the furnace in the crematory Friday night. Saturday morning Lievre's ashes were taken from the bottom of the retort by means of steel brushes, inclosed in an urn, and given to the nearest relativ present.

The New York Cremation Society, the parent of the United States Crematory Company, was formed in March, 1881, with a membership of about fifty residents of the city of Brooklyn. Since then 150 members hav joined the society. Among their number are physicians, clergymen, journalists, lawyers, and about thirty ladies. Professor Adler and Felix Adler, his brother; Courtlandt Palmer, Kate Field, Mrs. Meredith Read, and Andrew Carnegie are some of the more prominent members. The United States Crematory Company was started last spring with a capital stock of $35,000.

At midnight Expert Bermsderfer said the body had long since been reduced to ashes. He considered the experiment entirely successful. He had not put any coal into the furnace for several hours. He was letting the retort cool off gradually in order to hav the ashes thoroughly bleached.

A PLEA FOR CREMATION.

READ BEFORE THE SOCIETY OF MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE AND STATE MEDICIN BY WILLIAM M. M'LAURY, M.D.

In the course of human events, laws, customs, ceremonies, and even habits of thought change. There is a law of progression that manifests itself through individuals as well as nations. There are more indications of peaceful progress of our race toward higher modes of life now than ever before in the history of mankind. One change that is inevitable, and becoming more and more necessary for health and comfort in our nation, is in the disposal of the dead. By our habits of thought, by our laws, by our religious ceremonies, we are silently and solemnly taught that to reverently deposit the remains in a grave dug beneath the ground is the only way of showing proper respect to our departed friends. And with many, no doubt, the religious sentiment taught of the physical resurrection of the body would continue to be a great objection to their giving consent to substitute cremation for inhumation. But safety for the living, with change in religious sentiments, must in time overcome all such scruples.

The oriental nations that hav practiced cremation for cycles of time are more philosophic and hygienic than we who selfishly plume ourselvs on our highly enlightened Christian civilization.

Greece in her palmiest days cremated her dead. The ancients held to four elements in nature—air, water, earth, and fire, the latter being the most powerful, as it is capable of changing, purifying, and destroying each of the others.

In our own country, with its vast extent of soil and climate, there is a great difference in the danger to the living from the inhumation of the dead. In country places, where the population is not dense and the location of the cemetery is hygienically chosen, the danger to the living may be said to be very slight. But, as our country becomes older and more populous, the danger becomes increased in a geometrical proportion. It will be conceded by all that cemeteries in the vicinity of cities are a source of increasing danger to those cities. Take the city of New Orleans, for instance, where the graves cannot be dug so as to bury beneath the surface; hence the coffins are placed on the surface and mounds are built over them. In process of time some of these become leveled and broken; consequently the escaping gases from putrefying corpses poison the air for miles around, threatening seriously friends and employees who attempt to repair the damage. Not only is the air poisoned by cemeteries, but water in the vicinity. Wells are sunk in close proximity to decaying bodies, and I hav often myself perceived the cadaveric odor in drinking water of wells so situated.

Dr. Gray, of Orange, N. J., whom I met at Ocean Beach this summer, told me of a well in his town so near the cemetery that the men, while digging a grave, being driven from their work by a sudden and violent thunder-storm, as they returned to their work found the grave nearly filled with muddy rain-water, and, as they repaired to the nearest well for drinking-water, found the well-water also muddy; and, on extending their observations, found a subterranean communication between the grave they were digging and the well, which they proved by filling the grave with water and finding a corresponding rise of water in the well.

I hav often seen graves dug where the water had to be bailed out repeatedly while the grave was being dug, and bundles of straw or hay thrown in just before the coffin was lowered, to prevent the mourners hearing the coffin splash into the water.

By cremation we avoid another horrifying thing in regard to burial—it is the vermin infesting grave-yards. It is a fact well known by all grave-diggers that rats are abundant in grave-yards and burrow from grave to grave, gnaw the coffins, and feed on the dead bodies so tenderly and reverently placed there. All these things, so distressing to sympathetic friends and mourners, would be avoided by the simple, cleanly, reverent deposition of the dear friend's or relativ's body in the fragrant retort gleaming with rosy light.

We cannot overestimate the sanitary agency of heat; it is the only thing that will utterly destroy the cryptogamic spore and annihilate the mycelium. Freezing renders microbia dormant and inactiv, but they easily thaw into life again, and become as activ and propagativ as ever.

If we will only rationally compare the difference between burial and cremation, we may see how much there is every way in favor of the latter. The slow putrefaction, the offensiv stench, the miasmatic effluvia, the poisonous gases of contagious diseases and plagues, the burdensome expense of funerals—all are avoided by the simple, economical, healthful reduction of the human remains to ashes by the chemical agency of heat amid the fragrant odor of sweet spices.

From the legal side of the house we may hear the objection against cremation that, in cases of crime (felonious poisoning, for instance). the evidence of the crime is immediately and forever swept into oblivion. I would say, in reply to this objection, that the changes going on in society through this and other improvements in life will so elevate the standard of public morals and so modify the selfishness of individuals that heinous crimes of cruelty against the person will be of very rare occurrence. Radical improvements in the customs, habits, and ceremonies of a people or nation never go singly. A change of this kind would rid the people of an immense amount of superstition. It would be economic as well as hygienic. It would economize labor as well as material, and thus save thousands of dollars to poor people, who annually bury an immense amount of money which is greatly needed for food and raiment for the survivors. This they waste and bury, thinking that thereby they honor the dead. When we lighten the burdens of the poor we lessen crime. Criminals are made so by the hardening systems under which they liv.

We are still living in the midst of error. We look back and commiserate the people of the "dark ages." A few generations hence people will look back to our time and wonder why we did not reform abuses and correct our errors.

It is pertinent for this society, in its domain of state medicin, to suggest feasible methods as to the erection and establishment of crematories in all towns and cities where the public health makes it necessary for their establishment, and hav the entire business as a department of state.

But we hav first to agitate and educate the public mind up to such a condition that it will think and act upon the subject. This may be done by issuing tracts and circulars, and through the daily press, and directing earnest attention to it through national and state offices and officers. The various boards of health would be powerful aids in helping to mold public opinion.

To the members of this society, or the public who wish to further investigate this subject, I would recommend a very able paper read by my friend, Dr. P. C. Coal, before the Northwestern Medical and Surgical Society, and also to a more lengthy paper by Dr. E. J. Bermingham, published by him in 1881.

I would also call attention to an excellent paper by John O. Marble, M.D., of Worcester, Mass., published in the "Medical Communications of the Massachusetts Medical Society," Vol. xiii, No. 4, 1885.

In Memoriam.

The Nestor of American Liberalism is no more. An irreparable gap is made in the list of vice-presidents of the American Secular Union. He who for more than half a century has fearlessly fought in every struggle for mental and physical freedom; whose name has been synonymous with secular reforms; whose voice and pen hewed out in the realms of thought the victorious pathway along which our slower feet may now in safety tread; who breasted and crushed each wave of oppression and tyranny, Hon. Elizur Wright, ex-president of the National Liberal League, lies still and calm in Death's embrace at last. This grand pioneer of freedom and Freethought now

"Sleeps the sleep that knows no waking."

Nevertheless, to-day we are called upon to commemorate the immortality to which a life consecrated to freedom and humanity has secured, and here pay our tribute of homage to him who,

"Departing, leaves behind
Footprints on the sands of time."

How much more triumphant is this great hero who, without expecting a future existence, labored so nobly to make life worth living in this!

The history, achievements, and life-work of this intrepid abolitionist, humanitarian, philosopher, and great-hearted philanthropist, throws a halo of glory over American Secularism, and adds new luster to the bright record of our nation's true noblemen.

We refrain from enumerating in brief the services, trials, virtues, and talents, it would take volumes to portray, but earnestly hope that the contemplation of his intellectual greatness, his moral grandeur, his intrepid heroism and profound scientific attainments, may be the inspiration of the germ of emulation within us all.

[Passed unanimously by the Chicago Secular Union, Sunday, Nov. 29th.]

M. Pasteur's Researches in the Treatment of Hydrophobia.

The entire civilized world has for some time past been watching with intense interest the experiments on the treatment of hydrophobia conducted by the celebrated French scientist, Dr. Louis Pasteur. These researches hav now been so far completed that the results hav been presented by the investigator to the French Academy of Sciences. The first step in these investigations, as reported by cable to the Herald, was the inoculation of a rabbit with a fragment of tissue taken from the spine of a rabid dog. The incubation of the poison occupied fifteen days. As soon as the animal died, a portion of its spinal marrow was in turn inoculated into a second rabbit, and the process continued until sixty rabbits had been treated. Each inoculation increased the power of the virus, so that the last incubation occupied but seven days. As dried air diminishes the power of the virus, the spinal marrow of the inoculated rabbits was kept in bottles of dried air. In beginning his experiments, therefore, M. Pasteur inoculated his subject with the old tissue, and finished the operation by the injection of tissue that had been bottled only two days, the period of incubation of which would not exceed a week. These experiments hav been very successful, for after such an inoculation the subject is found to be entirely proof against hydrophobia. An excellent opportunity to test the new treatment was afforded by a lad, twelve years old, named Meister, who had been bitten fourteen times by a rabid dog, and who was brought to M. Pasteur. As there seemed no doubt of a speedy and painful death, should nothing be done for the child, he was considered a proper subject for experiment. In thirteen days the inoculations made upon the lad were gradually increased in strength, until the last was from a rabbit that had only died on the previous day. At the end of a hundred days the lad was in perfect health, and the experiment was pronounced a decided success. Another lad, named Judith, who was fifteen years old, and had been bitten by a mad dog, was progressing satisfactorily after a week's treatment, and a fortnight from the time of the accident.

To carry this system into effect, it will be necessary to hav rabbit farms established, where the animals will be kept constantly inoculated with the disease, just as we now hav bovine farms for the production of vaccine virus. Two lines of treatment are mentioned, the inoculation of human subjects and the blotting out of the disease by the compulsory inoculation of dogs for several generations. The origin and nature of hydrophobia are understood but imperfectly, and it is too soon to make any definit assertions in regard to M. Pasteur's system. It is probably but the first link in a chain of elaborate investigation. The honor, however, in such unique inquiries is to him who breaks the ground.—Scientific American.

An Extraordinary Book.—II.

ARE MOST OF THE LATIN AND GREEK CLASSICS, TOGETHER WITH ALL THE WRITINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS FORGERIES OF THE FOURTEENTH, FIFTEENTH, AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES?

Why is it that not one of the Greek fathers wrote good Greek, not even Dionysius the Areopagite? All use the same dialect. In the Gallic language there hav been many changes in 500 years; in the Greek, no change appears in 1,500 years; all the pretended fathers and historians use the same dialect and the same syntax. Balsamon (1186–1204), writes in the same style as Justin, Basil. and Chrysostom. So, also, in Latin, St. Bernard (1091–1153), and Alger (of Liege, who died about 1150), write as elegantly and eloquently as St. Augustine.

In the sixth century no heresy was invented; therefore there are very few writings of the fathers in that century. Procopius (495–565), professes to compile his work from earlier lucubrations. By the year 600 the system of forgery was exhausted. From that time until the tenth century there was little writing either in Greek or Latin. It is called the age of ignorance.

In all the Patriarchal sees there were pretended heresiarchs or abettors of heresy. At Alexandria, Dioscorus, Peter Mongus, et al; at Antioch, Paul of Samosata, Peter Cnapheus, et al; and at Rome, lest the see of St. Peter should be thought devoid of error, Honorius and Tiberius.

In fabricating Roman and Greek history they selected many names of men from ancient coins, of which there was a great quantity; for through these coins the names hav come down to us. The names not found on coins or in Pliny (the elder), they took from the Hebrews. That no Roman or Greek history, such as we hav, existed, is manifest from the fact that our histories are strangely at variance with the ancient coins, not only in regard to genealogy and chronology, but in the affairs of princes. This we hav shown from an examination of the imperial coins, from Cæsar to Heraclius (A.D., 641), and others.

If there were no written annals of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries further than brief records of the reigns in their order, with decrees, names and rumors of wars, how easy a task it would be for a forger to write a fabulous history of those times. He would describe civil wars in different provinces; then wars in foreign countries—England, Batavia, Germany and Spain; then leagues and treaties of peace. Such was the condition of things for twelve hundred years and more after Christ, when our ancestors preferred devout living to writing erudite annals.

Without the art of printing and with no public records how could we know who was bishop of Paris 150 or 200 years ago? And yet there was no public register in Gaul before the middle of the thirteenth century.

If any one should wish to prepare a history of Morocco and Fezzan or Algiers, not in ancient times but in our own day, could he not falsify with impunity? So, also, if he should choose to write a history of Persia, he might say that the Christian religion flourished among the kingdoms of Africa; he might describe celebrated councils and narrate cruel persecutions; he might name the kings, some Christian and others Mohammedan; in short, he could fabricate whatever he wished with impunity. How much more easy it was to do such things in the fourteenth century than in this age which abhors fables. Such is the whole history of the church in Africa as we now read it.

Not only did they write on parchment, but sometimes on leaden plates. And we hav had recent imitators of this. About the year 1599 a manuscript in Arabic was cited as found in a cave near Granada, and attested by D. Petro D. Castro, archbishop of that city. It contained many fables concerning the Infant Savior (the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy?). These leaden plates were, after many years, examined at Rome, in the pontificate of Alexander VII. (1655–7), and condemned as apocryphal. There are many of this kind of leaden sheets said to hav been deposited in the tombs of the saints with the names either of princes or consuls inscribed upon them. False inscriptions are also found on stones.

As in our time the Jansenists, who are heirs of the former impiety, write elegantly in the Gallic vernacular, so in the fourteenth century those who wrote the best Latin gave us Cicero, Virgil's Æneid, Lactantius, and other authors most noted for elegant writing. But they took care to hav their own lucubrations appear under these great names, because by concealing themselvs they had no fear of the powers that be, and by giving pretended authority they could fortify their Atheism in all time past. In the use of the names of Virgil, Cicero, Plutarch, and others, they were more desirous of propagating their impiety than of acquiring fame.

If in one Parisian college the various essays of the last thirty or forty years were to be inscribed on smoky parchment—all the tragedies, orations, poems, panegyrics, treatises, and other scholastic exercises—there would appear new Quintiliani, Senecæ, Plinii juniores, Statii, Horatii in Odis, and perhaps superior works to any of these. But now the art of forgery, as well as the motiv, formerly so prevalent, no longer exists. The "Constantinus" of our Mambrun (died 1661) is not inferior to the Æneid; the "odes" of our "Sarmatian Horace," Sarbriewski (died 1640) are in my judgment better than those of pseudo-Horace; the "Sedecias" of Malapert (died 1630) outshines any work of pseudo-Seneca.

There is a wonderful agreement among these writers, even when they seem to be very contradictory. These differences are the result of labor, lest the writers should appear to conspire among themselvs. Their unanimity is apparent in this: that their writings are almost all allegorical, historical, or enigmatical; wherefore, although the names, places, and times are different, there is the same allegoric and occult signification. Hence, you perceive how much useless writing there is in our time, in the vain endeavor to reconcile these forgeries and to get at the facts of ancient history.

Missionaries from Persia hav returned to us bringing Persian histories of their wars with Rome, which do not agree at all with our own annals. And yet those Persian writers are not to be considered any more truthful than our own supposititious ones. Before the time of Mohammed, the books of Arabian history were the merest fables and dreams, as I hav been told by those who are skilled in the Arabic language.

Were there then no books before the fourteenth century? Yes, indeed, many. But there were very few of such books as we now hav in great numbers in our libraries—books which nobody wanted to preserve, unless for the promotion of typography, such as were neither costly nor large. But our more noted libraries despised and excluded all such books. How then could it be that before the invention of printing not even one book existed which was even in one dogma Catholic, and in the libraries care was taken to hide and preserve only those books which were fabricated by some of these impious fellows?

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

FIRST USE OF THE TERM CHRISTIAN.—The term Christian is first used by Suetonius, A.D. 110, but the original word was probably Chrestian. Its next occurrence is in the letter of Adrian, between A.D. 117 and 138, and there also it was probably Chrestian. Then comes Justin, between A.D. 147 and 161, who at first most certainly, if not always, wrote the word Chrestian. After that, in the course of fifty years, it became popular, the term Chrestian meanwhile giving way to the more appropriate one of Christian.

W. F. JAMIESON writes: "Having been so much occupied during the past two months in travel and lecture-work, there was but little time left for sending in reports of progress. I never saw greater interest manifested by the people in Freethought than now. This week I am engaged in delivering a course of lectures in Paola, Kansas; am stopping with my old friends, Mr. J. T. Haughey and wife. Brother Haughey is a lecturer on Spiritualism, and a very Liberal-minded gentleman. Mrs. Haughey is a clear-minded thinker, identified with benevolent work, and, at the same time, like Elizabeth Cady Stanton, is a model housekeeper. In Paola reside Dr. Firebaugh and wife, S. Paris Davis and wife, Eislen and wife, and many others, activ Freethinkers. It is seven years since I last lectured in Paola. The city has greatly improved, and the state itself is full of progress The grand prairies, gently rolling, are a feast to the eye. It is gratifying to meet the old-time friends of ten years ago. I am expecting to spend six weeks in Texas; will be in Dexter City, Mo, early in January, where I can be addreased by Texas Liberals who desire me to deliver lectures in their locality."

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT O ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

E. M. Davia, $10. Total, $1,505.72.

News and Notes

The following, from the New York Herald, shows the progress of Secular ideas, and likewise the kind of opposition that is made:

Some members of the House hav promised that they will introduce bills ordering that the National Museum, the Naval Observatory, the Patent Office, the Botanical Gardens, the Congressional Library, and Capitol building shall be open to the public on Sundays from nine o'clock in the morning until half past four in the afternoon. The practice now is to close all of those places to the public on Sundays, and it is a fact that there are thousands of persons who hav resided here for years who hav not had an opportunity to enjoy the benefits of these places, for the reason that their employments keep them engaged during the hours when they are open. Already the Evangelical Pastors' Union hav given notice of their intention to oppose this measure in any shape that it may be presented. Indeed, it is said the Pastors' Union, recently organized, was organized especially to oppose this Sunday opening movement. At present the only public places that are open on Sundays are two beer parks. Some hundred bar-rooms hav back doors open for their customers. There is a very large class who do not desire to attend sacred (?) concerts at beer gardens on Sundays, but do desire to get the benefit of these museums and public buildings. They desire that they shall be open on Sunday, and they are moving strongly in that direction.

In view of the fact that this Sunday opening lies within the jurisdiction of the national Congress, all Liberals throughout the country should endeavor to hav their influence felt in the matter. In every congressional district letters should be written immemediately by friends of Sunday opening to their representativs urging the passage of the proposed bill. The Pastors' Union of Washington is up in arms on the opposition side, and no doubt the orthodox party will use every effort for the defeat of the bill, and will perhaps succeed, unless the Liberals show an equal energy in expressing their opinion. If several thousand letters were written by the Secularists to their representativs no doubt such an expression would hav a very great weight in legislativ action.

Let there be no delay, but an immediate work, so that public opinion can be expressed. Here is an opportunity for every individual Liberal to do a service for the cause. Let him not only write himself, but induce others to write, or circulate petitions and forward to the member of Congress. If the museums at Washington and New York are opened to the public on Sunday a most liberal influence will go forth for other reforms. It will be a triumph which will giv vast encouragement to our work.

The progress of the petitions in New York is shown by the following from the Evening Telegram of December 9th:

The entire labor press and all the labor organizations are actually clamoring for the opening of the museums, public libraries, and art galleries on Sundays. Circulars are now being distributed urging that the opening of those institutions be demanded by the citizens.

And this also from the Sunday Times of Dec. 13th:

"I don't see how the requests of so many persons of all denominations and faiths can be refused," Mr. S. P. Putnam, who has charge of the petitions asking that the museums in Central Park be opened to the public on Sunday, remarked yesterday. "I am now summarizing the large lists of petitioners we hav received and getting the whole matter in presentable shape, so that when our request is laid before the trustees of the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Art Museum it may be easily read and thoroughly understood. It is my intention to bring the question of opening the museums on Sunday before the trustees of those institutions within the next few days, so that an answer may be had, if possible, by the first of the new year."

On Friday a petition with 650 names was received headed by Roscoe Conkling and other prominent citizens. The merchants and business men of the city are largely in favor of the opening. The general voice of the working people as expressed in numerous signatures and resolutions is equally emphatic. It does not seem possible that a demand for simple justice so universal as this can be refused, yet bigotry dies hard, and victory can be won only by persistent and combined effort.

From all along the line the reports are most encouraging. There has never been such a busy lecturing season as at the present time. Watts, Remsburg, Bell, Jamieson, Stewart, Stevens, C. B. Reynolds, Wilson in Utah, Helen H. Gardener in Missouri, are making things lively for the orthodox party and highly interesting and useful to the Secular side of the question. Keep these brave men and women at work. A friend inclosing a contribution for the Union says: "You are doing a good work in pushing the Demands. Keep your organization and effort confined mainly to these." All critics to the contrary notwithstanding, the American Secular Union will fight it out on that line, and no small fight it will be either. However, those who choose to make other issues more important in their eyes hav our heartiest sympathy. The success of one is the success of all. Variety is the spice of life, and of progress, too. Let each one do his level best against the common enemy, and not strike a blow at friends.

SOME NEW BOOKS.—REMSBURG'S "SABBATH-BREAKING."

I hav just had the pleasure of reading Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking." As usual with Mr. Remsburg, he givs a masterly exposition of his subject. I wish all Liberals could hear this lecture, and if they can't hear it then they should read it, and, while buying it, they should buy an extra copy for an orthodox neighbor to read. If we can once get the orthodox notion of Sunday out of people's heads, I believe more will be accomplished for human welfare than by any other one thing. The old Puritanic Sabbath is simply horrible. It is the Inquisition on wheels, and from week to week makes millions unhappy, crushes out life, and manufactures hypocrits by the ten thousand. Read and circulate Remsburg's book. Its historic facts cannot be disputed. Its arguments are unanswerable. I wish we could circulate a million copies of this lecture. The ecclesiastical power is at present intrenched in the Sabbath. This seems to be the foundation of its tyranny. If we could take the Sabbath from the church its backbone would be gone. Its monopoly would be destroyed. Room would then be made for more cheerful and humane instrumentalities. The world would then hav a holiday that would be a constant incentiv to better things.

SUSAN WIXON'S "ALL IN A LIFETIME."

That Miss Wixon is a born New-Englander we might know by this book. It breathes of the soil—and the people in it we know—for in early life we met many of the same sort, and can vouch for the accuracy of the painting by the gifted authoress. The descriptions are exceedingly interesting. The poetic charm is there, and nature is seen in her beauty and grandeur. This book is written also with a purpose, and is alive with humanity. It sparkles with Liberal sentiments, and deep and grave problems are discussed with the insight of a woman's soul. It is a fine contribution to advanced thought, and no time is wasted in reading this romantic delineation of life. Instruction is gained, while the mind is free to charming effects. The plain prose of life must sometime be translated into romance, in order that sufficient stimulation may be acquired for the cheerful endurance of labor. When Liberals feel a little discouraged with the severities of our matter-of-fact conflict with evil, let them read this delightful story and take courage, for only in the ideal can we see the nobleness of the practical, and meet its duties with unconquerable spirit. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Liberal Club.

The 392d regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was a source of great pleasure and profit to the writer of these lines, and this notwithstanding that, every chair in the commodious hall being occupied, he was fain to content himself with a campstool. Thus humbly seated, it was only by the most fortuitous combination of circumstances that a sight of the platform could be had between the heads of those sitting in front, especially as it pleased many of the ladies there present to wear large, tall headgear, the glory of a woman being her bonnet.

Some preliminary business came up in the form of notices of other meetings, elsewhere to be held. A committee consisting of Robert Blissert, S. P. Putnam, and Charles Eckhart was appointed to inquire into the matter of Mr. Hanson, compositor, discharged from the office of the city printer for circulating a petition asking the managers of the Central Park museums to open on Sunday the institutions under their charge.

Then Mr. Putnam presented a resolution upon the death of the Hon. Elizur Wright, of Medford, Mass, whereof the following is a true copy:

Resolved, That in the life of Elizur Wright we recognize the services of one whose spirit was as broad as humanity, and whose aim was as lofty as justice; in his death the close of an honorable and eventful work; and in his memory a constant inspiration to greater efforts. And to his family the members of this club extend their cordial sympathy, and with them are consoled in his loss by the undying influence of his self sacrificing and heroic labors.

When the president asked if that was the sense of this meeting, all who spoke responded "Aye!" so it was passed and put upon the records of the club.

He who was to make the lecture for the evening was Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, and the subject would be the "Aristocracy of Freethought." Mr. Palmer, being a wealthy man and an aristocrat from birth, yet a democrat from conviction, not liking still to giv up his birthright of pre-eminence, would make shift to find a new aristocracy whereof a man might partake and still be a democrat. This he would call the aristocracy of Freethought, and the test of it should be merit and service. Unlike the past the true aristocrat would not be born altogether such, but would make himself into it. As to what constitutes a gentleman, about that there is much difference of opinion; the prize fighter would say, for an ersample, that J. Lawrence Sullivan is a perfect gintleman, spelling gentleman with an i. To Mr. Palmer's mind, there had been many true gentlemen. Such was Buddha, and Auguste Comte, and Jesus Christ, the latter being a Freethinker in his day and generation, who, if now on earth, would be in attendance upon the regular meetings of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

The lecture of Mr. Palmer being couched in fine and well-arranged parts of speech, the effect—besides the charm of the way he spoke it—was such that often while he talked, and again when he had given over, his hearers applauded in good earnest.

The lecturer of the evening having made an end of his speaking, Mr. Wakeman desired Thomas Davidson, professor, to come forward and please the audience by addressing them. So he spoke shortly, then recited a poem, not telling whose it was, whether by himself or not. Nevertheless it was a good one, and worthy being spoken by a learned man.

Then followed Mr. Putnam, agreeing with the lecturer mainly, but holding that there must be heroes as well as saints, work as well as prayer, and action as well as aspiration. All of Christianity and religion having good in it he accepted, but was not a slave to it. Mr. Putnam's speech had good effect—witty, some of it, making laughter and applause also.

Mr. Blissert, as a Christian, had to thank Mr. Palmer for his compliment to Christ. His Lord appeared superior, thus described, to what he was from the Archbishop of Canterbury's likeness of him. The workingmen had just canonized a new saint, Mr. Blissert said; the same was St. Boycott.

Van Buren Denslow, the lawyer, erstwhile litterateur and editor, who comes out of the west, made a speech next. Once, he said, the problem was about making agreement betwixt men and God. Now, there being no gods or devils found in clouds or storm or stream, men's chief concern was harmony with one another—the rich with poor, employer with employed. Men assuredly are not equal, nor were created thus, if created they were at all, of which there exists much doubt. Evolution, the process of everything, works the same change in men as with things else. Making man above the brute, it puts one man above his fellows. At the next meeting, Mr. Denslow, who is to be the speaker, will plead the cause of quality, which is to say, capital and kings, against the doctrin of equality.

Before they went home those of the audience acquainted with him shook hands with the lecturer, and complimented him for his fine effort. The poem below, whose author's name we hav not, might hav been written by Mr. Palmer, so near does it come to expressing what he said. It givs the spirit of his discourse better than this prosy record of it:

In that old world, so dimly seen,
  So high renowned in story,
When gay knights tilted on the green,
  And bards were in their glory;

When every river had its sprite,
  And every dell its fairy,
All dancing light, by day and night
  In garments light and airy;

Then heaven was near, and stars were then
  Not half so dim and distant;
They played a part, they mixed with men,
  Obstructiv or assistant.

The knight rode forth, all free from care,
  Amid the foe and stranger;
His steadfast star was watching there,
  And kept him safe from danger.

The new world smiles and shakes its head,
  And talks of law and science;
The lights are fled, the sprites are dead,
  The faith and the reliance.

'Tis long since that old spell we broke;
  Regain it can we never;
Yet what the heart of man once spoke
  Remains a truth forever.

The forms that clothed a noble truth
  May change, but cannot perish;
The old man thinks not as the youth,
  Yet still his dream would cherish.

So still we see, by day and night,
  Forms bright, and quaint, and airy,
And still the river has its sprite,
  And still the dell its fairy;

And still we go, all free from care,
  To do the work before us,
And trust—we scarce know how or where—
  Some star is watching o'er us.

Lectures and Meetings.

PROF W. S. BELL lectured at Hegeswitch, Ill., Dec. 10th and 11th, at Carpentersville on the 13th, and at Algonquin on the 15th. His address is care F. F. Follett, 302 State street, Chicago.

C. FANNY ALLYN speaks in Norwich, Conn., during February, and in Manchester, N. H., first two Sundays of March, 1886. She will accept New England engagements during the rest of the spring and summer.

S. P. PUTNAM will lecture for the Friendship Liberal League, Philadelphia, on Sunday, the 27th, at Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets. Subject, afternoon at 2 30, "The Demands of Humanity;" evening, at 7 30, "The American Secular Union; Its Work and Methods."

Selections and Communications.

Persecution in Australia.

From the Harbinger of Light.

A few weeks since the editor of a South Australian journal, a man of good repute save that he was a Spiritualist, was committed to prison for expressing his disbelief in the political honesty of a member of the legislature. More recently here in Melbourne there hav been published in the three principal journals statements regarding the editor of this paper ten times more damaging, and destitute of any substantial foundation, and for which we are as yet unable to obtain reparation.

Religious prejudice is evidently at the bottom of it. It is well known that numbers of professed Christians of the dogmatic type who hav made up their minds on a priori grounds that Spiritualism is a fraud, look upon all those who are prominently connected with the movement as deluders of the public, and, if they hav Freethought proclivities, as enemies to religion.

These people from their ignorant standpoint think they are doing God's work when they succeed in putting a superfluous spoke in the wheel of the man they hav so wrongly judged, and are therefore ever on the alert for an opportunity to push in the spoke, and either cause him a breakdown or stop his progress. It seems probable that such a one has been the instigator of the proceedings in the matter we are about to bring before our readers, and if so it will be seen that he has found plenty of willing co-operators in his persecuting work.

In the early part of the present year a friend in New Zealand sent us a journal called the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC, published by the Truth Seeker Company, Clinton Place, New York. It contained essays by Courtlandt Palmer, Horace Seaver, Stephen Pearl Andrews, and other writers of good repute and literary standing. It was illustrated with excellent portraits of celebrated reformatory speakers and writers, including R. G. Ingersoll, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and the late Professor Denton. Its articles were temperately written, and the whole tone elevating. Within its covers was a catalog of books sold at the publishing office, and as several were outside our catalog, and apparently suitable for additions thereto, we made a selection therefrom and sent a sample order for Freethought books, supplementing it with some lines on medical, social, and sexual science from the Murray Hill Publishing Company, who advertised in its pages (this, with physiology, phrenology, and hygienics being a branch of our business for which we hav a special catalog).

In due course the books arrived in Melbourne, and on being sent for after clearance were marked to "examin," and our carter had to go a second time for them. On this occasion the landing waiter took exception to a pamphlet entitled "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ," and refused delivery of the case until he had shown it to some one else. On the following day we visited the customs to ascertain the cause of the delay, and were asked by the landing surveyor if the pamphlet referred to was a proper thing. We informed him that not having read it we were unable to say, whereupon he proceeded to read a few lines, but got hopelessly stuck at the word "psychologized," which we had to read for him. We omitted, however, to interpret it, and fear that he has taken it for something fearfully blasphemous. We stated, however, that it was not apparently the style of book we should care about circulating, but there was nothing in it to justify the detention of our case, and demanded to know when the examination would be finished. A time being given, the case was again sent for, and our messenger returning without it, we wrote on Thursday, 22d ult., a letter of inquiry to the commissioner of customs.

On the 23d there appeared in the three morning papers paragraphs as follows:

The customs department has seized a case of blasphemous and indecent publications, imported from America and addressed to a bookseller in Russell street, Melbourne. The author of many of them is D. M. Bennett, who has served a year's imprisonment and been fined $300 in America for an offense committed in contravention of the Indecent Books act. The whole of the publications are to be destroyed.—Argus.

The commissioner of trade and customs, under the powers conferred by clause 50 of the Customs act, 1853, which renders all blasphemous or indecent literature, obscene prints, paintings, cards, or lithographic works, liable to confiscation and destruction, has seized a large case of pamphlets and tracts printed in New York under the title of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and addressed to a well-known person in Melbourne, who combines the sale of patent medicins and Spiritualistic literature. When the contents of the case were examined they were found to be of the vilest and most nauseating character. One of the pamphlets purports to be an open letter written to Jesus Christ by D. M. Bennett, a man who gained an unenviable notoriety some years ago in New York, where he was tried under the Indecent Books act for publishing blasphemous literature, and, being convicted, was sentenced to thirteen months' imprisonment, and compelled, besides, to pay a fine of $300. Another tract is entitled "Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds," the contents of which are so truly disgusting and so remarkably devoid of any kind of merit, that it is impossible to conceive what class of taste the writer attempted to cater for. The person to whom the parcel was addressed has applied to the commissioner of trade and customs to hav it delivered, but Mr. Langridge refused point blank to accede to the application."—Age.

The customs authorities hay just seized a large box of blasphemous periodicals which came from America, addressed to Mr. Terry, bookseller and druggist, of Russell street. The customs department is empowered under clause 50 of the Customs act, 1853, to seize any blasphemous, indecent, or obscene prints, pictures, books, or cards, and it is in accordance with this bill the present action has been taken. Prominent amongst this collection of literature are Truth Seeker Tracts, written with the special purpose of ridiculing religion and the Bible, the language and matter most flagrantly licentious. One of the Tracts is entitled "An Open Letter to Jesus Christ," by D. M. Bennett, who was tried some time ago in America under the indecent-book act and imprisoned for three years, as well as being mulcted in a penalty of $300. Another of the tracts bears the title "Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds."—Telegraph.

We were almost stunned at reading the above, but this feeling speedily gave way to righteous indignation and a desire to find out and bring to book the author of the scandal. The animus of the proceeding was evident; even had we not written to the commissioner, we should hav been called upon for an explanation before such damnable statements were furnished for publication; but in view of our explanatory letter, their issue is absolutely brutal. A man's moral character blackened and almost irretrievably tarnished without his knowingly having done anything to justify it, or having the slightest opportunity to check or avert the blow. Never did we feel the need of the consciousness of rectitude more than on this occasion; to know that hundreds of thousands of our fellow-countrymen were reading and believing that we were panderers to immorality. Those only who hav been placed in a similar position can appreciate our feelings, and there are very few of such.

Our first step was to our solicitors; our next to the newspaper offices. The editor of the Herald received us very courteously, examined the evidence put before him, and promised an explanatory paragraph, which he duly published. From the editor of the Age we demanded his authority for the statements he had made, and one of his subordinates who was summoned to explain stated that it came from the commissioner of customs. We obtained a promis that an explanatory letter, together with a copy of our letter to the commissioner, should be inserted in Saturday's issue, but it was not published till Monday. The Daily Telegraph accepted our explanation, and published our letter promptly. The editor of the Argus was not in town, but his "sub" directed us to send in our letter in good time for publication. This we did, but as it did not appear, and the office was, as usual, deserted by the staff on Saturday, we wrote the following letter, to be delivered at the earliest opportunity:

84 RUSSELL STREET, MELBOURNE, Oct 24, 1885.

EDITOR ARGUS, Sir: I saw your sub-editor yesterday in reference to a paragraph on the recent seizure of a case of books belonging to me by the customs; explained to him that said paragraph contained a most damaging libel on my character as a citizen, and furnished him with evidence of its incorrectness. By his advice I sent a brief letter explaining the circumstances in as concise a manner as possible, and am surprised and pained to find that said letter has not been published. I hav documents to prove the correctness of every statement made in it, and your omission to publish it, after giving publicity to the exparte statement of some custom house official, is most unjust. As far as I am at present informed only 3s 9d worth of the contents of the case, or a hundredth part of its value, are objected to, yet the inference is that the whole contents are both blasphemous and indecent. A grievous wrong has been done me in this matter, which the publication of my explanation can only partially rectify, and I trust you will make amends, so far as now practicable, by publishing my letter in Monday's issue. I am, sir, yours truly, W. H. TERRY.

Copy of invoice of goods inclosed herewith.

On the same day, having no answer from the commissioner to ours of the 22d, our solicitors wrote to him as follows:

13 COLLINS STREET WEST, MELBOURNE, Oct. 24, 1885.

The Hon. the Commissioner of Customs, Melbourne,

SIR: We hav the honor to inform you that Mr. W. H. Terry, of Russell street, Melbourne, importer of books, has consulted us relativ to your action in seizing a case containing books, etc., imported by him from America, and he has requested us to point out that he was at the time he sent the order, and still is, unaware of the contents of the books, etc., consigned to him.

We respectfully submit on his behalf that you should inform us the names of the books, etc., to which you take exception, and deliver to him the remainder of the goods in the case, and afford him an opportunity of inspecting the books condemned by you, in order to see whether they come within Sec. 50 of 47 Vict. No. 768.

We hav also to refer you to the serious imputation to our client's character by the publication in all the daily papers of your seizure of the case, from which it would appear that the whole contents of the case were found to be of the vilest and most nauseating character. Our client is a man well known in this city for his probity and respectability, and as serious damage is being done to him by the publication of the above-mentioned statement, we would urge that you should at once furnish us with the information asked for to enable our client to put himself right with the public with regard to the consignment of the documents to him, and to clear the imputations contained in the publications in the daily papers. We hav the honor to be, sir, your obedient servants,

WESTLEY & DEMAIN.

On Monday, 26th, our Argus letter of the 23d was still unpublished, and we received instead the following evasiv epistle:

ARGUS OFFICE, MELBOURNE, Oct. 25, 1885.

Dear Sir: I am directed by the editor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th inst. He, however, cannot regard it as satisfactory, as it mentions but one pamphlet, making no mention of a worse publication which the customs officers reported to be included in the consignment, and entitled, "Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds." The editor is at present prosecuting further inquiries as to the facts of the case. I am, sir, yours faithfully,

C. L. SMITH, pro the Editor.

W. H. TERRY, ESQ.

To which we promptly replied:

84 RUSSELL ST., MELBOURNE, Oct. 28, 1885.

THE EDITOR OF THE ARGUS, Sir: I am at a loss to know whether yours of yesterday refers to my letter of the 24th or the letter to the commissioner of customs. If the former, the 3s 9d referred to includes both the pamphlets; if the latter, it is based upon the information I had at the time it was written; but under any circumstances your paragraph was incorrect and libelous, and your delay in publishing my explanation is adding insult to injury. You state, first, "The customs department has seized a case of blasphemous and indecent publications." Now, the two pamphlets referred to only form one hundredth part of the case, as I advised you yesterday. Secondly, the sense in which the word "indecent" is used would imply that the said literature is obscene, which I hav reason to think it is not, and this is where the wrong comes in. I am charged with a crime, pronounced guilty, and punished without a hearing, or having any evidence beyond my accuser's that I hav committed it.

Secondly, your allusion to the bald fact of D. M. Bennett's conviction under the Indecent Books act intensifies the reflection upon me, because it would be assumed that I knew he was an immoral man. As a matter of fact, I know very little of him beyond this, that I hav before me a picture of a magnificent monument, erected to him in Brooklyn cemetery by "a thousand friends," which satisfies me that he could not be altogether a bad man. There are a few copies of his trial in the case which would probably hav thrown some light on the subject, but they hav been misused to get the fact without the context. I do no not ask the favor of your inserting my letter, but demand it as a simple act of justice, and a very poor recompense for the injury you hav contributed to do me.

I am, sir, yours truly, W. H. TERRY.

And on the following day our letter appeared with an editorial note as under, the animus of which is apparent:

[We hav delayed the publication of the above letter to enable us to make further inquiries, and we find, as we expected, that the pamphlet the title of which is given by Mr. Ter y is not the only publication included in the invoice which is objected to by the customs department. Some eight or ten pamphlets, we understand, are alleged by the customs officers to be blasphemous or indecent, and these are now under consideration by the law department, with a view of further action. Mr. Terry asserts that he is not an importer of indecent publications, but among the contents of the detained consignment is a pamphlet (a copy of which is in our possession) which is grossly and vulgarly indecent.—ED. A.]

He "expected" there was more, and is evidently delighted that the hunters hav found some. In view of the information he possessed of the circumstances under which the case was imported, the last part of the paragraph is mean and contemptible in the extreme. We immediately consulted the invoice and catalog to try and find out what the indecent pamphlet could be, but could get no clue from either, so sent the following memo.:

84 RUSSELL ST., Oct. 27, 1885.

The government appears to be more accommodating to you than it is to me and my solicitors, who hav applied (up to the present time in vain) for copies of the objectionable literature. Would it be asking too much of you to furnish me with the name of the "grossly and vulgarly indecent" pamphlet alluded to in your editorial note this morning?

W. H. TERRY.

No response, however, came to this, but on the 28th the following item appeared among the paragraphs:

The minister of trade and customs received a communication yesterday from the crown solicitor in reference to the recent seizure of blasphemous and indecent publications, and at once gave instructions for the case to be put into the hands of a solicitor.—Argus, October 28th.

On the same morning, finding that no answer had been returned by the government to our solicitors' application for copies of the books objected to, we instructed them to make a more urgent application, complaining of the damage we were suffering from their being withheld. We then personally waited upon the attorney-general with the view of eliciting some information; the matter had not, however, reached his hands, but he ascertained by telephone from the solicitor-general's office that a legal opinion had been given on a case submitted, and the matter referred back to the customs. By Mr. Kerferd's directions we saw the collector of customs, by whom we were treated most courteously and kindly. He disclaimed responsibility for the paragraphs which had appeared in the daily papers, and assured us of his impartiality in the matter. He called attention to a portion of the "Open Letter" before referred to, expressing his opinion that we were not aware of the contents of the book, which we assured him was the case. Remembering after leaving that the "Open Letter" was a pamphlet, while he had quoted from a book, we addressed him the following memo.:

A. W. MUSGRAVE, ESQ., Dear Sir: I omitted to notice the titles of the books you had before you, which I presume are those objected to. Will you kindly furnish me with same? The Argus speaks of a book from the case other than the "Open Letter." Query—How did they obtain this? Yours truly, W. H. TERRY.

To which the following is a reply:

Dear Sir: The books referred to are (1), "Trial of D. M. Bennett," and (2), "Truth Seeker Tracts." Yours faithfully,

A. W. MUSGRAVE.

At last we had something definit; at the time we now write, Oct. 28th, 10 P M., the mountain has dwindled down to a molehill. The "case" of blasphemous and indecent books has decreased to two, and one of these the rep ort of a trial for a breach of the postal laws, which must hav been previously published in the press; until we get the opportunity we are at a loss to know how this can be blasphemous or indecent, unless some of the witnesses used bad language. However, time will show.

The following is a copy of the invoice of the goods contained in the case:

1 Golden Throne; 1 Waifs and Wanderings; 5 Ingersoll and Jesus; 1 Science in Story; 10 Sexual Physiology; 2 Mother's Manual; 10 ea. Sexual Science Series; 10 ea. Sanitary Science Series; 1 Truth Seeker Around the World; 1 Champions of the Church; 1 Gods and Religions; Judaism and Christianity; 1 Thirty Discussions; 1 Humphrey-Bennett Discussion; 2 Bennett-Mair; 10 Great Religions; 10 Answers to Christian Questions; 10 Gods of Superstition; 10 J. C. An Infidel; 10 An Hour with the Devil; 10 Sinful Saints; 13 Open Letter to J. C. *5 Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This gives a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon Mr. Bennett.

25 Age of Reason; 5 Common Sense; 5 The Crisis; 1 Essays and Lectures; 5 What Liberalism Offers; 5 Spiritualism from Mat. Stand.; 10 Paine's Political Works; 10 Woman, her Past, etc; 10 Crimes and Cruelties; 1 Burgess-Underwood Debate; 5 Adv. of Science; 1 Business Man's Views; 1 Alamontada; 5 Amberley's Christ; Ecce Diabolous; 2 Gottlieb, His Life; 1 Hereafter; 1 J. C. His Life; 5 John's Way; 2 Last Will and Testament; 5 Pocket Theology; 5 Sepher Toldoth; 1 Sixteen Saviors; 20 Ads. of Elder Trip; 1 Brain and Bible; 1 Essence of Religion; 1 Heathen of the Heath; 2 Outcast; 2 Radical Pulpit; 5 Kill Devil.

*2 sets Truth Seeker Tracts Bound in volumes of 525 pages each: vols. I., II., III., IV., and V., each volume containing 525 pages, thirty tracts or more, a library within themselvs of most excellent Radical reading matter at a low price.

5 Hereditary Transmission; 10 Evolution; 10 Graduated Atmospheres; 10 Unseen World; 10 Evolution. Atheism, etc; 1 Litho. R G I.; 1 Short History of the Bible; 3 Moral Physiology; 2 History of Christianity; 1 Bible Analyzed; 6 Bible Morals; 12 False Claims; 1 Health Hints to Women, 10 What must we do, etc., 25 Ingersoll Catechised, 10 Truth Seeker Annuals, 20 Self-Contradictions, 6 Hand-books, Clergy a Source of Danger, 10 Responsibility of Sex.

The items marked with an asterisk are those objected to by the government.

Such is the case as it now stands, and our readers will clearly perceive the infamous wrong that has been done to us; but we do not mean to submit quietly to it. The filthy charges against us hav been circulated far and wide, and we know too well how scandal travels, especially when prejudice is behind it. A large section of the press are ever ready to seize hold of and use to the disadvantage of Spiritualists or Spiritualism any weapon that comes to hand, and, with many of them, the dirtier the better; they will risk soiling their own hands for the opportunity to blacken the reputation of people whose only crime has been searching for truth outside the prescribed limits, and a bold assertion that they hav found it there. We may be involved in law suits, and hav wealthy antagonists to cope with, but it is necessary for the re-establishment of our good name that as great or even greater publicity should be given to the facts as to the false and libelous statements. We shall look to our friends to help us in this, as the blow is aimed not alone at us, but at the cause we hav faithfully and assiduously represented. We hav worked not alone for Spiritualism, but for religious and mental freedom, and we hav endeavored to do this in such a way as not to merit the enmity of those who differed from us, and we trust that the friends of progress will rally round us in a time of need.

The Case of Mr. Symes, of Australia.

From the Liberator, Melbourne.

There is only one country in the world where people enjoy so much liberty as in Victoria, and that is holy Russia. We in England used to flatter ourselvs that we had made some degree of progress. And in leaving for the colonies we were told people here were far more free than in the old country. On arrival here, it was reported that all the members of the government were advanced Freethinkers; that Mr. Justice Higinbotham was almost an Agnostic, and one or two other judges were still more advanced. Bishop Moorhouse was held up as a latitudinarian, and the Argus and Age were represented as devoted to the most advanced views. And the reality? Victoria is the most cant-ridden place in the world, probably. Faith is dead, but its rotting carcass is everywhere, especially in the ranks of respectability.

The pending prosecutions show how free the country is. One judge may deliver an essay so Agnostic as to get Mr. Strong into a sea of hot water; another may issue a book repudiating in scornful language the orthodox views of Christianity. But you must not hold Secular meetings on Sunday and charge for admission, although government, cabs, 'busses, parsons, etc., may take as much money as they can on Sunday, or work on that day for money paid at other times! Cant is great, and his power is infinit.

On Wednesday, September 30th, Mr. Symes was in a fix. He had to answer three police court summonses, and went up to town for that purpose. He found the Liberator appeal case was down for hearing in the Full Court at the very same time. He went to the latter place and told the judges his predicament, and they let him off to attend the police court.

In that place he met the charges of keeping an orderly disorderly house, on three separate Sundays, the witnesses for the prosecution in each case affirming that the proceedings were perfectly proper. The farce was carried through, and the defendant committed for trial in each case. As matters now stand, Mr. Symes has to meet four distinct summonses in the Supreme Criminal Court in about a week's time!

After meeting these charges in the police court on the Wednesday, the defendant had to scramble through his preparation to argue the Liberator case before the Full Court on the following morning. This was rather hard work. The Full Court decided against us, for which we desire to be thankful. One point insisted upon by Mr. Justice Higinbotham is worthy of being laid to heart by Victorians. Mr. Symes argued that to construe the Act of Parliament to mean that every separate issue of a paper constituted an offense, and was liable to a penalty, meant ruin, not punishment. His honor emphatically declared that that was the object of the legislature; that they did mean to ruin the man that refused to giv the guarantees. We should scarcely hav believed this if a judge had not told us so. And what is the fault for which a man is devoted to ruin by the legislature? Is it murder? No. Forgery? Members of Parliament may do that. Swindling? All parsons hav carte blanche in that trade. The ruin of young girls? No; that is a saintly fault, and one that stamps a man respectable. Is it sedition? Oh, no; the Age may do any amount of that. Blasphemy? A judge may commit that with impunity. Ah, no! What then? A man is to be ruined who will not giv guarantees to pay all fines that may be inflicted upon him for publishing blasphemous and seditious libels in a cheap newspaper! That is the crime. He won't take out a Ticket-of-Leave; he claims the right to be free; he objects to be punished before he has offended! And for that atrocious crime he is not to be punished, but ruined! We are extremely glad to hav drawn this open dictum from his honor, for now Victorians know that the legislature does really intend to ruin everyone who dares to be a man! And all that is in the interest of what? Priestcraft and kingcraft. The world is certainly progressing.

And the upshot? We prophesy that Mr. Symes will go to prison. That is almost as certain as the revolution of day and night. He fully expects it, and that, too, at no distant date. The conspiracy against him is becoming more and more complete; the toils of his enemies are closing round him; Kerferd and Berry are desperate; their salaries are at stake; they must hav an electioneering cry, so they laugh in each other's face, wink with infinit meaning, and resolve to gull the parsons and their dupes by prosecuting the editor of this paper. It will bring them votes. Parsons are easily imposed upon; piety is extremely simple; the members of the kingdom of heaven hav become as little children; Berry and Kerferd pat them on the head; the innocents say, "They are two extremely nice men; we'll vote for them!"

Ay! but there is a future beyond the next election. How will these prosecutions be regarded then? Just in the same light that we now consider the governmental and judicial crimes of former days, when aristocrat and parson and judge (in many cases) maintained their position and emoluments by crushing all that was manly in the people. Will Victorians keep up their "respectable" classes at the cost of independence? For a while they may, but a few years will show them who their true friends are and reveal the hypocrisy and malice of the present persecutors.

Watch and Work.

A few years ago, when the clear-seeing few who understand that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty affirmed that our free school system was in danger of destruction from the narrow-minded bigotry of Protestants and the deep-laid schemes of the Catholics, they were told that their fears were groundless, as their utility and benefit were too well understood by the masses for the people ever to submit to their abolition or displacement.

Bigotry is always blind, as well as perverse and unjust, and on this account the Protestants contended so stubbornly for the retention of the King James's version of the Bible.

This furnished a (reasonable) pretext for the Catholics to object, and expose the injustice of compelling their children to listen to that they deem heretical.

While all Liberals understood that it was only a pretext on the part of Rome, their position was such that Liberals, so far as the Bible in the schools was concerned, had to take the same ground.

This species of Protestant bigotry was so saturated with simon-pure Puritanism that it felt it had a "thus saith the Lord" right to do all it had the power to do, in forcing its own superstitious notions, regardless of every principle of justice, and in violation of natural and constitutional rights.

The simple truth was apparent that the Protestant orthodox church controled the schools, and to that extent that no stone was left unturned to keep teachers of the Catholic persuasion out of place.

We reasoned with them, and endeavored to show that their position was untenable and that ere long they would discover that their supposed strength was a source of weakness, that it would giv their opponents the vantage ground to that extent that they would show their true colors, and be prepared to undermine the grand structure of the "free school system." They were too blind to heed the warning; behold the results. At first only occasionally did we read of some obscure priest refusing the rites of communion and absolution to his parishioners who sent their children to the public schools. These obscure leaders were deemed cranks, though Rome kept silent. These then isolated cases were the feelers put out to prepare and familiarize the public with this phase of opposition. Ere the sound of these faint mutterings had died away, others more loud and respectable were heard, until to-day they are echoed far and wide by priest and bishop. Catholicism never sleeps; it is Argus-eyed, seeing every opportunity, and losing none, to advance its interests.

We hav no right to find fault with Rome in leaving no stone unturned to maintain her supremacy, and it is worse than driveling idiocy to accuse Catholics of dishonesty.

They are honest to the core measured by their standard; consistent to perfection along their lines of thought; persistent to devotion, sacrifice, and heroism, wherever and whenever the claims of the church are in question, and their readiness to giv in labor and means without stint is a proof of their sincerity and singleness of purpose.

While Catholicism is one consistent and harmonious pile of superstition, Protestantism is a vast conglomeration of superstitious inconsistencies, inasmuch as it attempts to mix reason and superstition in about equal proportions. Rome understands that the "free school system" develops reason and prepares the mind for self-reliant and independent thought, and as such preparation endangers the position and influence of the church, the school must go. This is the legitimate conclusion; they can take no other ground and be honest Catholics.

What then? Simply this. The lines are fairly drawn, the battle is upon and before us.

If the people demand a secular education, one that shall seek to develop mind in harmony with the principles of reason, popular science, and the principles of the Declaration of Independence, the free school system will be maintained, and the persistent machinations of the Catholics to overthrow it will but cement all the Protestant elements in its defense, and ere the war is over all church properties will hav to pay their just share of taxation.

It is yet an open question which side will be the victors. The open, almost defiant, action of the Catholics, coupled with the universal apathy of the Protestants on this question, has a look of sixteenth century darkness, and we shall not be surprised at any move, in or out of Congress, the adherents of Rome may take. Of this we can rest assured, they mean business, and that is either the destruction of the free schools, or a division of the public moneys for school purposes, which latter will be the death-knell to the system.

In view of these facts the duties of the Secularists are imperativ.

Now, if ever, all available means should be used to further the object of secular government, every available missionary should be in the field, and all Liberalists should feel it a pleasure, as well as a duty, to do something to forward the necessary work.

The great state of Illinois should not be behind in the move, for, doubtless, we hav many good workers for this part of the harvest. Where is Brother Bell? Can he not ring his way along with the pleasant sounds of true freedom, justice, love, and equity? The poorest of us hav bed and board for the missionaries, and in addition many a point will be strained to show that we wish well to truth and liberty, and realize that "the laborer is worthy his hire." Set the ball a-rolling, and let the words go forth: Freedom for all, irrespectiv of sex or color, with free speech, free schools, exact and equal taxation, with complete and absolute separation of church and state.

Lockport, Ill. GEORGE LYNN.

Nearly All Methodists.

The Alamosa Independent relates a good joke about Rev. C. E. Brooks, chaplain of the state penitentiary at Canyon City. Shortly after Brooks arrived at Canyon City and entered upon his duties as chaplain, he was walking through the grounds of the penitentiary, when he was accosted by a convict, who said:

"You are our new chaplain, I believe. What religious persuasion do you profess?"

"I am a Methodist minister," replied the reverend.

"I am very glad of that, brother," replied the convict, shaking his hand heartily. "We are nearly all Methodists here."

ORIGIN OF THE NAME PETER.—A Galilean messiah makes a proselyte of a fisherman named Shemeun, and re-christens him Kepha, saying that he wants to build a church on that Kepha (rock). So starts the story, which, by degrees, grows into a gospel. By and by the Greek and Roman converts to the Messianic faith became acquainted with the Syrian legend, and wanting a rock of their own on which to erect their church, they translated the Syriac gospels into Greek, changing Kepha to Petros, and making Jesus talk Greek to his humble disciples ere they are endowed with the miraculous gift of tongues.

"WHERE are the people who want to hav a hand in reforming the world? Now is the time; come along."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 19, 1885.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures next year, the subscription list must be lengthened. We will renew one old subscription for a year, and send THE TRUTH SEEKER to one new subscriber for a year, for $5. Will not every one, in renewing, try to get a new subscriber?

The Suppression of Mormonism.

From Washington comes the information that Senator Edmunds will supplement his antipolygamy measures by a bill to wipe out the religion of Mormonism itself. The bill which he has ready to offer proposes that the act of the legislature of the state of Deseret, under which the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was incorporated, shall be repealed and annulled, and that the temporal affairs of the church shall be managed by a board of trustees, to be appointed by the president of the United States, by and with the consent of the senate, and shall close up the institution as rapidly as possible, under the direction of the secretary of the interior. The attorney-general is directed to institute and prosecute proceedings to forfeit and escheat to the United States all of the property owned by the Mormon church, with the exception of buildings used for public worship, and the secretary of the interior is directed to sell it, and invest the proceeds for the benefit of the public schools. The laws organizing and creating "The Perpetual Emigrant Fund Company" are also annulled, and the attorney-general is directed to dissolve the corporation, to pay its debts, to dispose of its property, and devote the proceeds to the benefit of the schools. The legislature is forbidden to create any company or association for the purpose of bringing emigrants into the territory. This bill, if passed, will do more to suppress Mormonism, Mr. Edmunds and the Christians think, than any other means that can be adopted, as the church is known to be a very wealthy corporation, and money causes a very close adhesion among the saints.

Very likely this bill would destroy Mormonism, though persecution of a sect has never yet been thoroughly satisfactory to the persecutors. The confiscation of all the property except the churches of either Catholics or Episcopalians would prove a very serious blow to those people. But such a step on the part of the general government would not only be illegal, but tyrannical in the extreme. A bill to confiscate the property of the Methodists in the territory of Montana would meet with a universal protest from everyone in the country. Yet such a bill would be no more unfair than the one proposed by Senator Edmunds.

For a year, now, the general government has been prosecuting polygamists, and the "twin relic" is in a fair way of becoming extinct. Polygamy is a loathsome and unnatural institution, but it is truly biblical, and, as such, Christians should not cast many stones at it. The revelations of Brigham Young are as authentic as those of St. Paul. We hav only the words of the men themselvs for their inspiration. But after polygamy is suppressed, there is no more reason, if as much, for suppressing the religion of Mormonism than there is for suppressing Catholicism. It is not for Congress to say what sects of Christianity may or may not hold property.

But, we are told, the Mormons are banding together to resist the enforcement of these laws. Very well; the United States army is large enough to sustain the Federal judges and enforce their decisions. When the Mormons commit an overt act against the peace of the territory, they must be punished the same as rioters in any state or territory are punished. To deprive them of their property, however, is going beyond the law. That their hierarchy is dangerous to the liberties of the people is true. So is the Catholic, and the pope's last word to his flocks consists of instruction to Romanize our government wherever the papists are numerous enough to do so. But Senator Edmunds has introduced no bill to confiscate Roman Catholic property, though there exists the same speculativ reasons for such a measure as for the bill against the Mormons.

When will the Christians learn that one man's right to his religion is as sacred as another's, and that with moral and religious questions the United States government has nothing to do? Congress may deal with the inhabitants of Utah as citizens, or, if they break the laws, as criminals. With them, as Mormons, Congress has nothing to do any more than it has with the inhabitants of New York as Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, or Baptists.

Christian Tyranny in Australia.

The Christian bigots are rampant in Melbourne, Australia, as will be seen by the extracts we make this week from the Liberator and Harbinger of Light. Mr. Symes, editor of the Liberator, expects to go to prison for having conducted Freethought meetings on Sundays. He is under three indictments for "keeping a disorderly house," which is the language the law uses to describe a Sunday lecture at which an admission fee is charged. In one day Mr. Symes was compelled to answer three police summonses, and argue another case before the full court. This is not prosecution, but persecution. The police summonses were on the "disorderly house" charge; the full court was hearing his defense of the indictment for publishing the Liberator without first depositing security that he would not publish blasphemous and seditious libel. This last persecution is under an old and long disused law. No other paper in Melbourne is required to deposit security, and the selection of the Liberator for prosecution is solely because of its Antichristian character. A penalty attaches for each separate publication, and the fines, which are almost sure to be inflicted upon the proprietors of the Liberator, will be simply enormous. Of course, they can never be paid. Mr. Symes called the attention of the court to this cumulativ penalty, and argued that fine could be inflicted only for the publication of the paper as a whole. To construe the act of Parliament to mean that every separate issue of a paper constituted an offense, said Mr. Symes, meant ruin, not punishment. To this Judge Higinbotham retorted that the object of the legislature was to ruin the man who refused to giv the guarantees. From this answer it may be seen how likely Mr. Symes is to get justice from the court. But he is not despairing. He will defend himself to the utmost, and his hope is in the jury. There may be, he thinks, twelve honest men who will prevent the colony of Victoria from being disgraced by a religious crime. But if not he will not go as a lamb to the slaughter, but, let the rogues do their worst, the Liberator will continue to be published. Others will take up his work, and the last word he utters outside the door of the jail will be one of defiance.

The other outrage is described by Mr. Terry, the editor of the Harbinger of Light, and is one with which THE TRUTH SEEKER has some connection, as it was from this office that the offending books were sent. Mr. Terry's account is very clear, and from it we are inclined to think Australian customs officials are about as stupid as their fellows up in Canada who confiscate Paine's and Ingersoll's works.

The books objected to are the "Trial of D. M. Bennett" and the bound volumes of "The Truth Seeker Tracts." We can easily imagin why Christians do not want these works read. But who ever heard of a court-record being classed as obscene! The trial of Mr. Bennett was a farce, and the book shows it. The quoted passages from the book upon which Mr. Bennett was convicted were a part of his lawyer's argument, and, if not too obscene to be read in a crowded court-room, ought not to be objected to as a matter of history.

The tracts in the volumes confiscated by the Australian officers as blasphemous and obscene are the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ" and "Sinful Saints." It may please the customs officers to learn that Anthony Comstock once shared their opinion as to the first-mentioned tract, and arrested Mr. Bennett for selling it. But it ought to dampen their ardor to know that the attorney-general at Washington did not so regard it, and ordered the prosecution discontinued. To "Sinful Saints" no one except Christians can object. It is a record of a few of the Christian criminals from Noah down to a recent date, and was compiled by Mr. Bennett to confute his Christian adversaries who constantly, and without reason, charged upon Freethinkers the commission of all sorts of crimes. It is a weapon which it would be unnecessary to use were not the churchmen such unconscionable liars about Freethinkers. But as it is, it is impossible to get along without it. Before "Sinful Saints" Christians hav to double up and keep silence regarding Freethinkers' lapses from virtue. The customs officials must remember that the wrong is not in recording a crime, but in committing it.

Taken all in all, from the judges who are condemning Mr. Symes to the officials confiscating a whole case of books because two or three do not suit their tastes, the Christians of Melbourne, Australia, are a most tyrannical set. If Mr. Symes and Mr. Terry should liv to reach a thousand years of age, they would find the time all too short to civilize their fellow-countrymen.

The Sunday Question.

Germany is recognized by all nations as among the first in material prosperity and intellectual vigor. She is the arbiter of Europe because of the strength of character of her people. Her institutions and laws are by no means all good, but as a nation she is powerful, and her people are vigorous.

One of the church arguments for a puritanical Sabbath is that those countries which keep not the Sabbath holy are decayed nations, weak and with no influence among surrounding governments. Of this argument Germany is a perpetual refutation. A writer in a Christian paper, who has been in Berlin, says that such a thing as the "Lord's day" is practically unknown in that city. All classes of society, the workingman, the merchant, the professional man, when they open their eyes on Sunday morning, say to themselvs, "Now for a day of pleasure," and in their own way they seek it. During the summer extra trains are run to the many small towns and villages lying about the city, and early in the morning the great railway stations are crowded with men, women, and children, glad for the chance of escaping from the narrow, crowded streets, into the open country. Within the city itself, summer and winter, the streets are more crowded than ever. A large part of the stores remain open, and the sidewalks are thronged with an ever-increasing mass of people of all conditions and nationalities. All the theaters and opera-houses are in full blast on Sunday night; indeed, it is the most popular day of all the week, and the tickets are generally all sold the day before. Frequently the Royal Opera House is honored by the presence of the emperor himself. Between six and seven o'clock Unter den Linden is at the hight of its gaiety. The elegant Café Bauer, on the corner of Friedrich strass, is a blaze of light; a long line of vehicles of every kind, from the common droshke to the family carriage of some member of the aristocracy, is making its way to the opera house; the sidewalks are full of pleasure-seekers.

Germany, as is well known, is not a religious nation. The government, it is true, maintains the churches, but the people do not attend them. They do not all deny the Christian religion, but they are indifferent. In Berlin only two churches are filled on Sunday—the cathedral and the garrison church. But religion is not the attraction. In the cathedral the royal family is visible on Sunday; at the garrison church the military attend, and the civilians go to see the military. So says our Christian writer.

France, too, makes a holiday of Sunday, the population of the cities spending the day in museums, libraries, at the races, in the theaters, cafés, etc. Elections are held on that day, when all are at leisure to attend. France is Infidel as well as Germany, except the ignorant part of the populace, which is Roman Catholic.

Now if Germany and France prosper so well with their "continental" Sundays, we fail to see how New York and Washington are going to the demnition bow-wows by opening their museums on that day. The Lord is not striking dead many Germans and Frenchmen for violation of puritanical Sunday ideas, and we do not think he would begin the slaughter of the Gothamites and Washingtonians.

Hobby-Ridden.

We find in the last issue of Liberty the following, by Monsignor X—, alias Henry Appleton, alias "Honorius," of the Irish World—one of the brainy but sophistical gentlemen who write editorials for Mr. Tucker's paper:

"Friend Putnam says he is an Anarchist, but has no sooner said it than he shrugs himself together anxiously, scratches his head thoughtfnlly, and in painful hesitation remarks: 'But I don't quite see how your plan would work in the case of a man who insisted upon the individual right of standing his neighbor on his head and making a town pump of him. It is the difficulty I find in solving a few such problems as this under your institution of Anarchy that keeps me from coming out a full-fledged Anarchist.'

"Macdonald, the valiant iconoclast of THE TRUTH SEEKER, concedes cheerfully that he goes a long way with the Anarchists; 'but what I want to know,' he says snappishly, 'is how your institution of Anarchy proposes to deal with ruffians who go about breaking heads, flinging greek-fire and dynamite bombs into the faces of innocent pedestrians, and raising hell generally at other people's expense. I hav stumped Tucker to solve these problems and answer my puzzles, but cannot get a word out of him. Your system is all head and no body—impracticable bosh.'

"Young Dr. Foote, brave and progressiv, says that his tendencies are all Anarchistic; 'but what I want to know,' he says, 'is how the institution of Anarchy proposes to deal with a leper or small-pox victim who insists on the right as an individual sovereign of squatting in a healthy, thickly-settled neighborhood.'

"Now, all these timid doubting Thomases are simply institution-ridden. Anarchy is not an institution, but rather the sworn enemy of all institutions. Its essential mission is the disintegration of institutions wherever found. An institution implies authority and force. Anarchy poises itself on consent. Every instituted machine denies liberty. Liberty is the life-principle of Anarchy; hence liberty and the institution are natural enemies. The Anarchist finds order (natural social combination) only in liberty, just as the chemist in his laboratory only finds natural physical combination (chemical order) when the given elements are 'set free.' To view Anarchy, then, as an institution is to utterly distort it, and render a correct understanding of its aims and workings impossible. To attempt to study out the workings of Anarchism in given social problems involving good order by instituting correspondences with existing machines is to artificially make it the very thing which it starts out not to be, and nothing but confusion is obtainable.

"Anarchists are not trying to set up a system. Nature has provided the system in the very integral order of things, if only the grip of authority can be loosened from human concerns, and liberty be allowed to awaken the responsiv life of natural reciprocity in social commerce. As surely will the very best methods of social adjustment respond to given wants as fast as men are set free as do the laws of natural combination respond in the chemist's laboratory the moment he sets given elements free. Liberty is to the social laboratory what heat is to the chemical. It is the universal disintegrator—the eternal promis of natural order."

So far as the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER is concerned, it is unnecessary to say he never said anything of the kind. But nevertheless Mr. Appleton has managed to pretty faithfully express the editor's sentiments.

What Mr. Appleton evidently thinks are reasons in support of Anarchy are, however, but a bundle of assertions, without support in fact, or sound basis in philosophy. Whether Anarchy be called an institution, a system, or a philosophy, it is equally unfitted—judging it by the words of its professional expounders—for this age of the world, or for any age of which we can conceive short of the millennium. The individual initiativ and voluntary co-operation of which it consists, according to Mr. Tucker, is impossible of realization. But were it possible, the voluntary co-operation society would be an institution as much as any community that ever existed, and would speedily fall to pieces unless a restraining force were exercised against the "individual initiativ" which should attempt to invade the rights of others. In other words, destroy to-day every vestige of government, and a new one must necessarily be instituted to-morrow. If this should be done by voluntary co-operation instead of by electing officers, it would yet be an institution exercising a restraining negativ force to prevent violent invasion of individual rights, and also exercising a positiv force to secure individual liberty. The best of governments is a necessary evil, yet that it is necessary no man in his senses can deny. If Anarchy is the sworn enemy of all institutions, then it is the enemy of order—even of that order which might obtain under voluntary co-operation.

"Anarchy poises itself on consent." Does Mr. Appleton suppose he would ever get the consent of a thief to his own imprisonment? But if a thief's violent invasion of individual right is by voluntary co-operation of individuals to be forcefully punished, what difference is there between Anarchy and the institution of government? Or, is not the thief to be punished? or are there no thieves in the world?

Just suppose for a moment that all the "natural physical combinations" of humanity were "set free" for a moment. We should hav Anarchy, of course. But who could liv in such a society? The ruffians, would rule, and the decent people, averse to contentions, would be slaves. "Ah, but," says Mr. Appleton, "Nature has provided the system in the very integral order of things, if only the grip of authority can be loosened from human concerns and liberty be allowed to awaken the responsiv life of natural reciprocity in social commerce." "Nature," with Mr. Appleton, seems to hav taken the place of the theological God. But "nature" is as vicious as "god," and no more humane. Nature may be likened to a huge whirling millstone, revolving unceasingly, grinding everything in its way, whether it be a man or a molecule. There is no charity in nature, no humanity. It never weeps, it never pities, it never rejoices. It is uniform, and swerves not from its course. The provisions that obtain in nature are that the strong devour the weak, the cunning outwit the open-hearted, the fittest survive. But the "fitness" of nature is strength and adaptability, physical or mental, and the system of survival is one of cruelty.

The most "natural" man was a savage. By association he has "got rid of his tail," and evolved for his own security and comfort the civilized society which protects Mr. Appleton in his assaults upon it. That too much "society" has been evolved is true. The people are oppressed by the natural tyranny of those they hav chosen to enforce their rules. But governments can be modified by those governed, and reduced to the minimum of force necessary to protect all alike. This social adjustment is going on. We are doing what we can to help it by destroying priestcraft, though we do not propose to murder the priests. Liberty for ourselvs includes liberty for them as well. But it is not necessary for the public welfare that we support them. The public welfare does demand that we hav a government. There are millions of people, including these priests, ready, through the proclivities given them by nature, to violently invade individual rights the moment they can safely do so, and Monsignor X knows it. We recommend, therefore, that he cease his vapid bosh about Anarchy being liberty, and come down to solid facts as we hav them to-day. When the millennium arrives we will vote for the repeal of all statute laws. We can not do it to-day, because the Christians are too thick, and there are too many people around with loose notions of meum and tuum. Let Mr. Appleton reform the world before he universally disintegrates everything.

MAKE your children a Christmas or New Year's present of "The Story Hour."

Some attractiv books will also be found in the list published on our last page.

Editorial Notes.

SINCE the Congress of the American Secular Union at Cleveland the people of that city hav been treated to a good deal of Freethought through the columns of the Plaindealer, the editor of which paper seems to be a very fair-minded man. Though many Christians of the place object to his spreading Infidelity before the public, he refuses to waste-basket Freethought communications and persists in reporting the doings and sayings of the local Freethinkers. We congratulate him upon the rigidity of his spinal column.

SOME time ago Mr. Spurgeon's Sword and the Trowel, published in London, copied from an American journal Clarke Braden's libel upon Liberal, Mo., heading it "Practical Results of Atheism." In the last number of the Sword and the Trowel appears this correction: "IN the month of August we extracted a paragraph concerning the town of Liberal from one of our American exchanges, which had taken it from the Burlington (Vt) Free Press. We inserted the extract with the name of the originating paper, and supposed it to be in all respects accurate. The truth of the description having been challenged, we promised that we would insert a disclaimer, if we were furnished with evidence of its untruthfulness. At once we wrote to friends in America. The evidence which we hav received is very conflicting, but we feel bound to say that we judge the article which we inserted to be far from correct, and to hav been written in a prejudiced spirit. We should never hav dreamed of inserting it had we known what we now know. We desire not only to print the truth, but also nothing but the truth, whatever the subject may be. It is not right to paint one's opponent in any colors but his own, and we will be no party to the blackening even of Atheists and Freethinkers. We are not in a position to giv a judicial opinion, for we cannot weigh the evidence; but supposing the persons who hav written to be truthful, we judge that the town of Liberal has been in several respects grossly libeled, and therefore we are truly sorry to hav given currency to the ill report. American Christian papers should truthfully chronicle the real result of the sad experiment which is being worked out in Liberal, and should carefully abstain from a word of exaggeration.—C. H. S."

GEN. T. J. THORP, of Michigan, an able lawyer and a sincere Theist, gives Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking" the following unqualified indorsement: "I hav read it with care, and hav placed it in my library where I can re-read it to my children and friends. The logic contained in this lecture completely rends the cloud of superstition, and lets in the sunlight of truth. The lecture is a fearless assault, not upon principles of morality and truth, but upon a relic of pagan worship which not only degrades the glory and diguity of the God of the universe, but dwarfs the rational spirituality of man."

"JUST now," says the Christian at Work, "as the pope in his encyclical is enjoining upon Roman Catholics to do all in their power to cause the constitutions of states and legislation to be modeled on the principles of the true church, it is a question if Protestants hav not devolved upon them the duty of carrying their distinctiv religious views directly into the heart of politics." So, so; then we are to hav the two great sects fighting for spoils of political office! In such a contest the long experience of Roman Catholicism at filching from public treasuries places that church at an immense advantage over the Protestant. But the followers of Luther do nobly when they hav the chance!

A WELL-KNOWN merchant of Philadelphia, whose business requires him to travel considerably in different parts of the country, writes the Christian Advocate concerning the desecration of Sunday, which he is constrained to witness. He states that he feels especially saddened, as very much of this desecration is by ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal church in going to and returning from camp-meeting on Sunday. Since the early part of July, he observes, "I hav traveled through many parts of Pennsylvania, Obio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, as far as St. Paul and Minneapolis, and hav been grieved by reading in the secular papers notices of the running of Sunday trains to camp-meetings where distinguished ministers of our church were named to preach." He speaks of one of the Methodist bishops preaching at a camp-meeting of this kind on a Sunday morning, and says that the bishop in his sermon spoke against traveling on the trains on Sunday. On which the Chicago Tribune, in its notice of the sermon, sarcastically remarked "that the bishop did not think that a great proportion of his audience broke the Sabbath in going to hear him, and would again break it in returning to their homes in the evening." He observed, also, in the Indianapolis Journal, that the Sunday morning services at one camp-meeting were delayed until the arrival of the excursion train from Indianapolis, which was behind time, from the large number on the train. He says that in Rochester, N. Y., the summer before, be attended a Methodist church, and the minister gave notice of a camp-meeting commencing that week. "And," said tbe minister, "those of our Christian friends who cannot attend during the week can hav the opportunity of hearing the prominent ministers (whose names were given) on the Sabbath, as trains would leave every half hour." Mr. Buckley's friend adds: "As I witnessed the crowds going to and returning from camp-meeting on the Sabbath, I could but conclude that it is not the Communists and Infidels who are the sole cause of the desecration of the Sabbath." All of which, we submit, is very sad!

IT is with the sincerest sorrow that we record the death of Byron Boardman, of Norwich, Conn., which occurred December 6th, a result of consumption. Mr. Boardman was born in Griswold, Conn., April 14, 1831, and removed to Norwich in 1851, entering the employ of C. B. Rogers & Co., where he learned the machinist's trade. Here for many years he unfolded his inventiv powers with devotion and enthusiasm. The result of his intense application was the development of various useful machines. His most important invention, that which brought him financial success, and proved of incalculable value, was a very complicated machine for making what are known as "Boardman's barbed blind staples." He was greatly esteemed among business men for his honesty and integrity. Mr. Boardman was well known to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER when Mr. Bennett was in trouble, through his writings defending the imprisoned editor, and for his personal efforts in his behalf. Mr. Boardman was an untiring worker in supporting the rights of medical men in his state, and in defending Freethought from the churchmen. He was also a fervent Spiritualist. He organized in Norwich the "First Spiritual Union," and was the guiding spirit and supporter of the society. He was an Atheist as well, and his last writing was a circular arguing against a "God" in our national Constitution. This circular is now being distributed throughout Norwich. He died without fear, and in asking a friend to write for him to us, he said, "Tell Eugene that I stood by my principles to the last, and passed away with neither fear nor dread, and that I shall be often with him assisting and watching over the interests of the dear old TRUTH SEEKER." He talked affectionately of Mr. Bennett, and looked forward to death as to a journey to meet him. Mr. Boardman was twice asked to accept the presidency of the Connecticut state League, but his failing health rendered it impossible for him to perform the duties of the office. He was, however, a worker to the last, as his circular, written only two weeks previous to his death testifies. Of him it can truly be said, His good works liv after him, and whether his death is eternal sleep or but the opening of a door to another world, he has attained immortality; for he has done much to Liberalize his community, and the effects must be for permanent good. The address of his literary administratix is Lessie N. Goodell, 63 High street, Norwich, Conn., and those of his friends who can help to carry on his work by distributing his "God-in-the-Constitution" circular may address her for copies.

Letters from Friends.

WICHITA, KAN., Nov. 22, 1885.

MR EDITOR: I hand you herewith $72.75, for which you will please send to me by fast freight books as per inclosed list. These books, with a few volumes that hav been donated from private libraries, are the beginning of the library of Wichita Scientific and Liberal Association. Last April Messrs. Watts and Putnam came here, and after their lecture we succeeded in organizing a Liberal League. While we hav a very strong Liberal element here, we hav not so far succeeded in getting our Liberals to work together in an organization to any great extent. The business of a Liberal heretofore has been to keep himself under cover, and thus escape persecution, and a great many persons yet hesitate to identify themselvs with an Infidel organization, and thus proclaim to the world that they hav become emancipated from the slavery of creed. They think that to do so means a loss of business and social ostracism. But we hav some who hav manhood enough to entertain an honest opinion, and to giv expression to it on occasion, and who propose to keep abreast of the most advanced thought.

About a month ago Mr. O. A. Phelps gave four lectures here, and succeeded in creating quite a revival among our folks, and in shaking up the dry bones of the old fossils of Hebrew mythology. The common theme of our preachers since has been "The Evidences of Christianity." Mr. Phelps is a forcible speaker, and one of the clearest and most logical reasoners that it has ever been my good fortune to hear, and it is a great pity that he is not kept constantly employed in the lecture field.

We are just now organizing ourselvs into a corporation under the laws of the state of Kansas, and are getting in a shape that we can transact business as any other corporation. Our purpose is to start with a small library and reading-room, and the order that I send herewith, together with the books that we already hav, will make over a hundred volumes to start with, and we hope to add to this number from time to time.

In addition to the regular library and reading-room, we are going to procure a lot of tracts, such as Ingersoll's lectures, and hav them sold on the streets by newsboys. We think we can make this scheme self-sustaining, besides making it a means of distributing a large amount of Liberal literature. We would like very much some good man, who is thoroughly competent, to come here and start a Liberal paper. We hav the most thoroughly wideawake city in the West. It is now only fifteen years old, and has a population of nearly twenty thousand, and it is growing rapidly. New railroads are being built, and this is coming to be the distributing point for all of Southwestern Kansas, a part of the Indian territory, and Colorado. Of course, the man who starts a paper here is not going to be carried away on flowery beds of ease, but he must expect hard work in the beginning; but I do not know of such a good field for a live, wideawake paper. If anyone seeing this letter thinks he would like to embark in such an enterprise, let him correspond with me.

Yours, G. W. COLLINGS.

ALLIANCE, O., Nov. 29, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I am a patron of THE TRUTH SEEKER and all Liberal works, and as I was thinking of making a few presents about the holidays, I thought a selection of such works as "Complete Works" of Paine, Ingersoll, and Bennett, the most appropriate. What think you? Please send me a catalog of your publications and lowest prices. By all means let us hav pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I will pledge you my support, and think I can get you a subscriber occasionally.

Yours, H. H. HOYER.

LINDSAY, ONT., Dec. 6, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Being a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER since its early existence in New York, and having perused its every copy with a deep interest, I write to say something in reference to making it an illustrated paper, and also to make a few general remarks. Judging from the few illustrations already inserted, I am fully of the opinion that to illustrate every copy would make the paper irresistibly attractiv. Who is there that does not reach for an engraving or picture of any kind? And these are so demonstrating and so convincing that to my mind there is no doubt as to the increased influence it would giv THE TRUTH SEEKER. Of course the additional cost I do not understand, and therefore cannot discuss, but should that be deemed too heavy, an illustration every other week, or even once a month, might be practicable; at any rate, even a monthly, well-chosen illustration would, I contend, add to the effectivness and in the end to the circulation of the paper. I am deeply interested in the spread and progress of Freethought, and anxious to see the best means employed to overthrow superstition, which is after all only a matter of time. When I see such lights of science and friends of this race pass away as Darwin and Hugo, and such great and good men as Garrison and Wright, all at very advanced ages, all opposed to superstition and ignorance, and all, with thousands of our best minds, opposed to that bloodiest of superstitions, Christianity, I anxiously wish "Oh, that such men could liv longer and keep up the fight!" Yes, what a pity that the immortal Bennett had to succumb to the inevitable, to lay down his arms just when he was beginning to wear his well-won laurels! I support THE TRUTH SEEKER because it is waging a great battle against vice, wrong, superstition, and priestcraft; but if there were no other cause I would support it because it was instituted by D. M. Bennett, than whom no bolder champion of right ever lived. He unfurled the banner, and although the gallant general is fallen, yet his warriors hav increased and still they flock to that standard, still they fight.

Amid the darkness that superstition envelops our Canadian people in there are most encouraging indications of breaking day. People here read more, think more, and therefore doubt more. The old revival system so long practiced by the Methodists, and later by the Presbyterians and even the Episcopalians, has lost its charms, and when a few "seekers" are induced to "come forward," how noticeable it is that they are almost exclusivly women and children. In fact, we hav but little now of revivals. Hell has lost its terror, people are beginning to believe that they should be governed by what the senses can grasp, and that the clergy hav too long continued to teach for dollars and cents what they told them cost neither money nor price; too long been teaching what they do not know themselvs. The lectures of Mr. Underwood, Mr. Chainey, and Mr. Watts hav had their effects, and Mr. Remsburg should indeed be included. But we want more lectures, many more. Mr. Reynolds's tent is, I believe, a grand thought, and would work well in this county. I sincerely hope it may soon be tried. One cannot but notice the strained efforts that are put forth to sustain the churches. Lotteries (gambling), pound socials, basket socials, church fairs, bazaars, etc., etc., and after all this, and begging besides, the Freethinkers hav to help pay their taxes; they are paupers on the state. This cannot last, there must come a time when each will worship as he pleases, or not if he pleases, and every man pay his own taxes. Why should well-fed, well educated men be parasites on society? Heavenly fortune-tellers, celestial gypsies, placing great burdens on men's backs heavy to be borne; our churches are costly, cushioned, and nearly all mortgaged, while poverty's loud calls for charity can be heard almost in their very shadows. The churches supply the criminals, screen the guilty clergy, tax the masses, and impoverish the state. Christians belie, defraud, deceive, imprison, burn, and hang one another. When, oh when! will men do right because it is right, and not for fear of hell, or to get paid in heaven?

But then the Bible says, "Many are called but few are chosen." If this were true, how much better for the brute. No evil forebodings about hell, no anxiety about death, disease, hunger, disappointment; no terror about small-pox, cholera or war, pestilence or famin, etc. "Man hath no pre-eminence over the beast of the field," said Solomon. How reasonable it is for those who believe in it to become insane from fear of hell, and oh! how many hav; and that excrescence, the Salvation Army, stands out very conspicuously here, and yet how their deluded dupes increase! Truly has it been said, "the common people love to be deceived." The final struggle must be between the papacy on one side and Freethought, Liberalism, and science on the other, for they are antipodes. Protestantism is beset on one side by popery, wealthy, imperious, numerous, aged and powerful, and on the other by Freethought, progressiv, aggressiv, persuasiv, meritorious, just, which in the end must conquer all. It is even now reflecting its benignant advent ahead. We will continue to hope and wait.

THOS. A. MIDDLETON.

AUBURN, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: In the issue of the Auburn Daily Advertiser of Nov. 30th there appeared an editorial (which I inclose) entitled "Ingersollism Organized." I at once replied to it, severely criticising the Advertiser for parading Mr. Ingersoll as an "organic evil," in behalf of the American Secular Union. I say, I took the editor of the Advertiser at once to task in rather severe terms for his very unjust onslaught against the Union and its honored officers, and vindicated them in their worthiness of purpose, mission, etc., as much as could be done in a newspaper article, showing who Mr. Ingersoll and all the exemplary officers were.

Yesterday morning, on receiving THE TRUTH SEEKER, I saw the same "Ingersollism Organized" published on page 772, copied from the Mail and Express. Previous to this I was at a loss to know where the Auburn Daily Advertiser got its information enabling it to publish "Ingersollism Organized," knowing full well that it had no exchange with THE TRUTH SEEKER. The secret is now solved. The Advertiser plagiarized "Ingersollism Organized" from the Mail and Express and palmed it off as being its own production in relation to the Union. Upon submitting my reply to the Advertiser for publication in answer to its now known plagiarized, unjust attack upon the Union, the "editor" appeared very reticent and made several untenable excuses to absolve himself from publishing any reply from me. But after much presentation of the merits of the case he agreed to publish the reply provided he could "revise" and "condense" it; which being done by him, leaves the reply only half its length, and in a form much different from what I wrote. Every exposure of his unfairness and injustice has been expunged, and he lets himself down as easy as possible.

L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

FORT SCOTT, KAN., Dec. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: During the late summer and fall I hav been constantly lecturing in Kansas and Nebraska, and hav given particular attention to the condition of the Liberal movement and its prospects. In one respect, at least, what is true elsewhere is true here, that unbelief of religious dogmas is unprecedentedly spreading. Every class, and nearly every man, who reads is more or less tinctured with skepticism. Even the religious folks do not feel that horror they once felt when Infidelity is mentioned, for they, too, are affected by the prevailing unbelief in theology.

Whatever power the pulpit has exerted over men in the past, it is beyond doubt that to-day its influence is very feeble. I do not account for this simply by the fact that the public press givs to every man greater information concerning the affairs of the world at large than he otherwise could obtain, but also that the sympathies and views of ministers are utterly foreign to the pressing needs of the masses. There is as strong a desire to listen to public instruction now as never before, but the pulpit does not meet that want. While the people generally are practically solving the problems of civilized life, while they are interested in those things that affect the means of subsistence, the clergy are still devoted to find the harmonies of metaphysical absurdities and the necessity of theological conundrums. The average minister has only one story to tell, and he never forgets it, nor does he hav anything besides. As a rule, they are as incompetent to throw any light on the questions which agitate modern politics as they are of grappling with the philosophic arguments of Infidels.

I recently met a young preacher, a fair representativ of that class. During our conversation I asked him what course he pursued in his attempts to refute Infidelity. "By preaching Christ," he replied. I informed him that, as a rule, those who were called "Infidels" had some philosophic reasons for their unbelief, and he would never be successful in reclaiming them unless he refuted those reasons. The very attitude of the church to Secular matters precludes the possibility of its being an important factor in civilization. Everywhere this seems to be understood; and the only reason that the church is supported is because it has the prestige of age and organization.

In nearly every place where I hav lectured the church labors hard to keep people away from the lectures. Special meetings are called, but only the old and the feeble attend them. Audiences range all the way from fifty to three hundred, and with only one or two exceptions I hav had the most desirable attention.

There is one practice of some of our lecturers that I never adopt except by special request. I refer to the habit of distinctly announcing either on the bills or from the platform that anyone may ask questions or make any reply. With but a few exceptions I hav found that only ignorant fanatics say anything. I regard it as humiliating to any lecturer to invoke the criticism of a class who are incompetent to logically state a proposition. If they will present a representativ who is willing to debate questions at issue, it is all right. My conviction is that no good can result from either debates or criticisms unless there is acknowledged ability on both sides.

There are more fearless Liberals in Nebraska than in any other state I hav yet lectured in. There are, of course, many who are afraid of the church, and even support it. But with a constant agitation, by lectures and the distribution of Liberal literature, that state would soon rank among the strongholds of Liberalism.

It is to be deplored that so many of our Leagues are inactiv. Without a doubt, that is not the best method of organization, except in large cities, where lectures can be regularly given. Very few of the Leagues can record more than a few times of gathering, and the interest first manifested soon passes away. The most advisable plan, to my mind, is to call a convention either for these Western states, or for each particular state, and by assembling the most activ Liberals, methods could be agreed upon for local work. Mr. E. C. Walker recently suggested in Lucifer the propriety of having a convention at Omaha. I think that Kansas City is a more proper place; and if properly managed would call together a large number of Liberals from Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska. The subject deserves constant discussion until a convention is held somewhere in the West. It is not strange that so many Liberals are indifferent, when nothing is done to excite their enthusiasm. Every community should, as often as possible, be furnished with lectures; and every Liberal should support the Liberal press. On these two things does our success depend. Every year brings great additions to our ranks, and every year should bring with it increased energy of purpose among the friends of our cause. We are not working for another life, but for this. The realities and possibilities of this world are enough to inspire any man with the loftiest zeal.

The two conventions recently held hav cast an influence over the entire country. The religious as well as the Secular press of the West hav criticised them, and many who were doubtful of the Liberal movement are now convinced that, with prudence and purpose, it will become a powerful agent in the future history of this people.

I shall be pleased to hear from all Liberals, both in Kansas and Nebraska, who are desirous of securing lectures. Subjects and terms sent on application.

J. L. ANDREW.

PACIFIC, MO, Nov. 2, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: On Oct. 10, 1885, my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER ran out. My liking and love for it, as well as your need of money, demands a renewal. I inclose $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for '86. Please find, and excuse the short delay.

"Conditions" must be "favorable," you know, for a perfect and true materialization—so say Spiritualists, and so say I. But, Mr. Editor, it would go hard with some of our Materialistic friends, co-workers of Freethought, who ridicule the idea, were they brought to a "test" in their own condition. Nature is against them—the seasons, seed and harvest, birth and death, thought and ideas, every aim and purpose. Now, they know all that, but do they observe it? No! Now, that is one and the great reason that there is so much controversy, so much dispute, among Liberals, Materialists, and Spiritualists. If many would only adhere to the laws and principles as found in nature, and laid down by the rule of science, all dispute and ill feeling would be avoided. But with all the knowing (if it is not a mere repetition) of pre-cause, education, and environment, rights, causes, effects, capacities for rights, and reason are dished out and adjusted by and of their individual self. Now, that is not fair. Now, I would like to know if man is excluded from the general principle in nature—whether he is a "being" in nature or outside of it. What does "A Materialist" mean when he says there is nothing outside of nature, speaking of intelligence, of mind, of spirit? Can "A Materialist" tell a Spiritualist how much a man is outside or inside his work? The master outside or inside his machine? Science outside or inside its object of knowledge? Whether the fish is outside or inside the water? Or even the apple outside or inside of the tree that produced it? Or in how much he is outside of the whole, to be competent to adjust and to judge what is not, and cannot be, outside?

Now, Mr. Editor, I hav heard and read much ridiculing the idea that conditions must be "favorable" for a communication or materialization by the spirit—even by our venerable friend Seaver, of Boston. While nature is a condition all around; while each nature is but its own; while man is but man, and not almighty, and differs widely in mind; and spirits are but those of the dead; and while like causes can produce but like effects; and while people are a good deal alike in nature and habits, in speech and temper; and while, as is well known, a man cannot lift himself by his own ears, nor a cause explain itself—with all of these facts of a natural condition, the idea or call by mediums for a proper or "favorable condition" is ridiculed. Is that fair? Matter is eternal. How do they know? If it is, then the mind is; then thought is, for it is of it, cannot be less than it; for like cause produces like effect, and so the same principle on; the same principle, life, or being, after death is insured. A. H. KRUGER.

P.S.—I spoke of myself as a Spiritualist. Now, with that or by that I do not mean that I am not like any other human being, with needs and wants, and the love and liking of all the good things of this world, for that is natal to us all. And further, I hold that care and knowledge of the laws of nature as we see it; the manners and methods of life as we are it, as we liv it, are of "first and greatest importance." So you will see that I am first a Materialist, and through contact and thought a Spiritualist; and what I hav through contact and repeated experience, through sight and hearing, constitutes in law and equity a "knowing" as to that and me. And further as to that: If "believe" made people Spiritualists, then, what must the Roman subjects be, or any church bigot? No one will accuse them of being too spiritual. A. H. K.

WHEELING, VA., Dec. 5, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to congratulate you upon the manner in which you are conducting your noble sheet, THE TRUTH SEEKER. Every week it comes freighted with good and wholesome truths. Indeed, it is a sledge-hammer worthy of the man who faithfully pounds, by the force of its and his logic, the stuffing (in Western phrasology) out of theology. The last number is especially interesting, as it commenced with a very able and instructiv article on scientific subjects, by the worthy pen of Mr. Ballou. In regard, though, to the opinions of men of great distinction upon the mysterious problem of electricity, he or they take opposit grounds from our worthy and lucid writer, Mr. Milleson, of Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Milleson, in my opinion, in his article on "Thunderstorms," does the subject of electricity justice. Whether these conclusions of his are from scientific researches or from other writers I cannot here say, but this much, his deductions were eminently practical, and I must say they coincided with my ideas of the rather mysterious problem of the electric fluid; and, as I hav been a great admirer of the electric spark as it shoots from pole to pole, or along its great attractiv center, the air, I feel intensely interested in hearing it discussed by men who appear at home on the merits of that wonderful phenomenon. I would suggest that Mr. Milleson giv us a digest of his observations, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, on the subject of electricity. And then, if Mr. Ballou, or any other individul, sees proper to differ from that gentleman on the merits of the same, let them show irrefutable arguments to the contrary. Another article deeply interesting in your columns is the arguments presented by Mr. Michael Coleman to the Senate Investigating Committee. These statements hav the right ring about them, and shows that, even in our state and municipal authorities, a few men are bold and conscientious enough to lend a voice in opposition to priestly and ecclesiastical dictation. Field's attack upon the character of that apostle of liberty, Thomas Paine, is the most malignant and damnable utterance that ever broke through the lips of man. But when we recollect that this man has toadied to Queen Vic. and her minions by erecting a monument to that arch-traitor, Andre, your readers can draw their own inferences. Hoping that the world may see their error and flee from the wrath to come, I subscribe myself, Yours truly, OCTAVIUS J. BROSIUS.

GLEN HALL, PA., Nov. 28, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the gentle monitor, the little tab on the wrapper of my paper, that I am in arrears, and the only remedy is to forward $3, which please find inclosed. The season of year is here for long nights and protracted meetings, which are being held among the various denominations, and our little daily local, in order to cater to the popular feeling, givs daily accounts of the many converts. Such is not the fact, as I hav lived in this section for forty years, and I do not know of one denomination that hav half the number of members that they had twenty-five years ago, with the exception of the Catholic.

Our little paper givs account to-night of one Baptist church having thirty converts, all to be ducked next Sunday. It surely ought to make a great change in a neighborhood to turn thirty sinners to saints. I hav been surrounded at different times by persons who hav passed through these changes, and I find they are still human, only a little more so.

On the first of November I went to Philadelphia to hear a lecture by Charles Watts delivered in the afternoon to a crowded house of more than a thousand persons; also in the evening to an audience equally as large; and also on Monday evening, to a very respectable number, at a charge of twenty-five cents each. These lectures were well received, often with much applause. I could not avoid noting the great change in public feeling in the past ten years. It is not many years since it would hav been almost at the risk of Mr. Watts's life to giv such lectures. Now it is to crowded houses with general applause. Truly we are progressing.

The Mormons are being fined and imprisoned for indorsing and carrying out what they no doubt honestly believe to be the requirement of the Bible. Thirty years back this section of Chester county was the stronghold of Mormonism. Quite a number of families embraced the Mormon faith and left comfortable homes and journeyed to Nauvoo. I am not a believer in Mormonism, nor the book that justifies such teaching.

I liv six miles from West Chester, which has a population of eight or nine thousand, and is the county town of Chester county. About two years past I attended a lecture delivered by Col. R. G. Ingersoll in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia. I invited Mr. Ingersoll to lecture for us in West Chester, which he promised to do, but has not yet favored us. There are other lecturers that we would very much like to hear, but I fear they could not get an audience in our priest-ridden town.

If I liv till next summer I intend to use all effort to hav Mr. Reynolds pitch his Tent in a pleasant grove in the borough limits of West Chester. R. I. LAMBORN.

HUTCHINSON, KAN., Nov. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: It is customary for young ladies to go to church, especially in the evening, and for their "fellows" to go and wait for them outside the church for the pleasure of accompanying them home. It is no uncommon thing out here in Kansas to see from ten to twenty of these yet beardless youths thus waiting outside a popular church in the evening, and the conversation indulged in by these lords of creation is usually in strange contrast with that going on inside. The following is a fair illustration:

First youth (to one who had just come out of the church): "What the devil is the old fellow talking about to-night?"

Second youth: "About the devil tempting Christ. You ought to go in and hear him."

First youth: "Oh, the devil! What the devil do I care whether the devil tempted Christ or not?"

Second youth: "The devil you don't."

But the preacher inside is laboring hard, and trying to seem in earnest, to prove that the devil did tempt the eternal God, and that by proving this he is rendering them a service at least worth the amount of his salary. Is it any wonder that the young men should say, "What the devil do we care whether the devil tempted Christ or not?" It is a matter of no more moment to them than the stories of "Bluebeard" and "Jack the Giant killer." How many things there are of much more importance for these young men to know than this two-thousand-year-old story of the devil and Christ! J. G. M.

SOUTH LOWELL, MASS., Nov. 25, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: To-day I send pay for another year. I would feel lost for intellectual food without THE TRUTH SEEKER. When D. M. Bennett was imprisoned I took his paper from sympathy, and it has been a better educator than all the clergy of forty years' experience. Now I know something; then it was believe. J. D. Shaw has condensed finely my views, so far as he goes.

A paper that givs all sides a hearing, and leaves the reader to decide on their worth, must assuredly cause the mind to grow.

The reports of conventions and speeches are food for mind growth. Where Prohibition and anti Prohibition, Spiritualism and anti-Spiritualism, are each and all given a hearing, leaving the reader for the jury, there must be a good method to gain truth. Then the friendly letters giv further variety, and such fair editorials go to make THE TRUTH SEEKER one of the best papers in my knowledge.

If laborers could all be employed at good living wages your subscription could be doubled in one year. Go on with your work, and may you hav the good wishes of two worlds.

DR. J. K. DEARTH.

PAYSON, UTAH, Nov. 24, 285.

MR. EDITOR: It may be interesting to some of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER to hear a little from the land of Zion, the home of the saints of the latter days. There has been a growing interest of late here among some of the Liberals to organize, and hav a lecturer to travel through the territory, and to this end a few of the leading Liberals about six weeks since concluded to send Mr. Robert Wilson, of Ogden, through the territory. His mission was to visit all the Freethinkers in the different towns, and to find out the strength of the same, and to lecture wherever he could get the privilege to do so. I do not propose to giv the full particulars of Mr. Wilson's travels so far, but suffice to say that he lectured in Payson two nights last week in the Opera House, there being about four hundred people present. The people seemed to take quite an interest in the subject, which was, "Infidelity vs. Christianity, and Agnosticism vs. Superstition." Mr. Wilson is a very fair speaker, and should be by all means kept employed in this territory, continually lecturing and organizing, and he should also be supplied well with Freethought literature, and also be the agent for all the Freethought papers. If he could be thus employed he would do more, in my opinion, than all the judges on the bench in Utah could do in destroying polygamy and uprooting superstition. I hope the Liberals of Utah will feel enough interest to keep the fire that is being kindled by Mr. Wilson burning. And let us organize the territory into a Union or League; next we can organize other Leagues throughout the territory, and then the kingdom of God, so-called, will vanish like snow before the summer sun. In this vicinity there are about twenty-eight persons who are willing to organize, and we intend to try it at an early day—perhaps on Thomas Paine's next birthday. I am satisfied that if the Freethinkers of Utah would half try, we could convert as many to Freethought as the Mormon missionaries could convert abroad to Mormonism, and thus keep the disease from spreading. What do you say, fellow-Freethinkers of Utah, shall we try it? H. S. BROOKS.

NEWPORT, ME., Dec. 5, E.M. 285.

MR. EDITOR: Under the heading of "Editorial Notes" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 28th, someone is charged with "hawking about in the hall of the last Convention a prurient poem." As a friend, I kindly ask the writer of that note to tell me who the person was who was in that kind of business. I was at every session of the Convention, except an hour's absence at the police court, and I saw no one in that kind of business. I am proud to say I sold a very grand poem entitled "The Reign of Love and Freedom," by Frances Rose Mackinly, a poem good enough to adorn the pages of any and every Liberal paper in the world. And if you will print it entire in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I will take a dollar's worth of the papers containing it.

I do not know why you should charge the person who sold that poem as a "hawker." It does not sound very respectful to use such language toward a gentleman engaged in a very important work.

The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER hav but little idea of the number, and the grand letters from almost every state in this country, speaking in the highest terms of commendation of the paper and the poem; and one writer to whom a dollar was returned, thinking it was sent by mistake, says, "The two copies are cheap at one dollar; so I return it."

It is said that history repeats itself. In the days of Abolitionism the church and clergy ranged themselvs on the side of despotism and against liberty. What did the Abolitionists contend for? Freedom, that is all. What are the Freelovers demanding? Freedom—nothing more, nothing less. During the fiery contest for freedom through all the fierce battle of the Abolitionists, and the fearful struggle on the battle-field, the sheep took their natural places on the right hand of Freedom, and the goats on the left hand of Despotism. And what will history say of those who fought with all their demon like strength to perpetuate the accursed system of slavery on this continent? Will they not be branded as the foes to liberty and the enemies of their race?

And is history to repeat itself in the action of the Freethinkers toward liberty? Is there to be another separation as in the days of Abolitionism? Will Infidels hav to be counted on the side of Despotism?

To liken a private home to a public meeting, where everyone was invited to attend, is the weakest argument I hav read for a long while. A given number of persons hav a right to meet together, and make laws or rules for themselvs only. They hav no right to count in one single person outside. To giv out a general invitation for all persons to attend a convention, and then circumscribe their liberty in the least degree, is despotism pure and simple, that is all. SEWARD MITCHELL.

P. S.—Why were the inspired pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER soiled with the account of that trickster and fraud, Truesdell? I was disgusted with every word. A person who will pen and send to such a grand paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER such a villainous affair as that, is no true friend of any good cause.

S. M.

NEVINVILLE, IA., Dec. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The thick shadows of superstition hav enwrapped this poor, benighted village, ever since its foundation—thirty years ago. For a few weeks past I hav been looking forward to the event of J. E. Remsburg's lecture here on the 20th of November, as announced in previous issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as a ray of light bursting from behind a dark cloud and presenting a strong contrast to the gloomy imaginations of theology. And for that purpose I had engaged the Town Hall of one of the shareholders. But alas! "The best laid plans o' mice an' men gang aft a-gley." And so it proved on this occasion. The hall is owned by a stock company, and the controling vote is in the power of an orthodox, A. T. Jay, who is also one of the three school directors of the Nevin district. Therefore all doors were closed on the speaker at this point. But while my Christian friends were successful in depriving Mr. Remsburg of a hearing on the present occasion, I giv them my pledge, on the honor of an Infidel, that unless I "experience a change of heart," they shall yet hear the truth proclaimed in clarion tones in the midst of them. Nor shall as able a defender of mental liberty as J. E. Remsburg be kept in silence one evening for want of a house while depending on me to provide one, until I hav been denied all suitable buildings within reach. Accordingly, I repaired to Cromwell, the nearest station on the main line of the C. B. & Q. railroad. There are many Liberal-minded people in Cromwell and its surrounding country, among whom are George Johnson and A. S. Bailey, M.D., who own jointly a fine hall, and who kindly extended to Mr. Remsburg the courtesy denied him at Nevin.

The evening was providentially fair, and this being the first time Liberalism was ever voiced in Cromwell, no little curiosity was excited. The house was filled until all standing-room was occupied, and close attention given throughout the discourse. Some good people who dropped in, expecting to hav a quiet doze under the soothing influence of a drowsy sermon, were observed to start from their seats and catch a long breath, as if they heard the Angel Gabriel's trumpet, at the first sound of the Iconoclast's hammer, as he proceeded to demolish the Christian Sabbath. The work was complete, and cordially received by many, of whom it is the earnest desire that Mr. Remsburg may favor them with a course of lectures sometime in the future.

In closing, permit me to add that in meeting Mr. Remsburg at Prescott, from whence I was to accompany him to Nevinville, I had the additional pleasure of meeting a number of activ Liberals of that vicinity, and also of clasping the warm hand of Brother Vincent, of the Nonconformist, of Tabor, Ia. I tell you, Mr. Editor, it is a treat to meet among Freethinkers to a man who is accustomed to associate with those who consider him as fit only for kindling for sheol.

Yours, F. I. GREEN.

MARYSVILLE, KAN., Dec. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Our mutual friend, J. L. Andrew, is doing a heap of good work in this part of the country for the "good cause," as pious people usually say, but which means in our case as much as Infidelity straight. In our city he gave three good lectures lately, on "Christianity," "Infidelity," and "Liberty and Law," on the right of personal freedom and the legitimate jurisdiction of civil government. All these lectures gave the fullest satisfaction to those present—not only those who sympathized with his sentiments but also good Christians and church people, who pronounced him an able, logical, and interesting speaker. Hoping the good work of this kind being done at present will be crowned with universal success in the near future, I am, Yours, JOHN MERKLINGHAUS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Lilly and the Brooklet.

[We hav received in response to Mr. Scott's offer several beautiful poems, each one well worthy of a prize. It was hard to decide where all had so much merit, and, not wishing to be accused of partiality, we called to our aid the talent of a literary critic, who, after some deliberation, finally decided upon the poetry below by Dr. Bell. As we had silently inclined to this poem ourself, we select it as one jewel from a number of gems, and to Dr. Bell is awarded the prize—George Eliot's poems. If there is no objection the poetry that has been sent in as contesting for the prize will be printed hereafter.—ED. C C.]

Down beside the purling brook,
In a grassy shady nook
Lilly, with her picture book,
Sat and watched the babbling rill
As it dashed adown the hill,
Headlong rushing, babbling still.

This same maiden with her book
Had her reading quite forsook,
Gazing at the shining brook;
And while idly gazing on
This bright streamlet in the sun,
Ever present ever gone,

She was puzzled, she was shy,
But she asked the reason why
Its bright waters rippled by.
"Why not stop and rest awhile?
Why go many a weary mile?
Why not stop and bid me smile?

Come and hear the red bird sing,
See the blood red of his wing
In this happy hour of spring.
Why do you go dashing past
Down your hill-side path so fast,
And your crystal waters cast

So against the frowning rocks
In such rough and rugged shocks
Making white your foamy locks?
If you further onward go,
You will meet a doom of woe
In that precipice below."

But the stream went hurrying by,
Laughing with its crystal eye,
Thus addressed the maiden shy:
"Should I stop within the nook,
With you and your pretty book,
I could never be a brook.

I've a duty I must do
In the storm and calm time too,
Never faltering, ever true.
Urged forever from my source
By a mighty unseen force,
I must speed my onward course;

Stopping not to fear the woe
That may meet me far below,
I must to the ocean go.
If I stay one moment there,
Basking in the sunny air,
Sister streamlets everywhere,

Happy in their duties done,
And their races rightly run,
And their goals in triumph won,
Would forever leave behind
Me, the laggard of my kind,
In severe remorse of mind.

Crystal waters now so fair,
Leaping in the balmy air,
Would sink into dull despair.
Lips like yours would from me shrink,
Foul and filthy worms would sink
To my bottom from my brink.

Stagnant, I should be a pest,
On my bosom slime would rest,
Dark repulsion fill my breast.
Leaping now from hill to hill,
Joyous, limpid, running rill,
I am on my duty still.

And unto both fish and beast,
Vegetation West and East,
I'm a never ending feast.
So to man both high and low
I'm a blessing as I go
In my constant, constant flow.

Now my little maiden dear,
Ask me not to idle here
In a life so dark and drear.
Learn from me, as there you sit,
Watching my bright sparkles flit,
These bright gems of wisdom's wit:

Your young life is like to me
On my journey to the sea,
Full of joyous song and glee.
Naught of good can you achieve,
Naught of woe can you relieve,
Naught of wrong your past retrieve,

If you idly loiter on
Pathis where duty may be done,
Where may gems of worth be won.
Make now hence your purpose high,
Vow to do the right, nor sigh
'Cause of danger frowning nigh.

Struggle on with cheerful heart,
Never dread disaster's dart,
Never from your duty part.
Every idle thought control
On and onward to the goal
Be the purpose of your soul.

Then at last will peaceful be
Your lost mingling in the sea
Of the great eternity."
Thus the brooklet spoke and said;
Through the grassy glen it sped,
Down its rocky hill-side bed.

Lilly caught each passing strain,
Paused to hear its voice again,
But the brook was off amain.
Now she pondered well the voice,
Made obedience her choice,
In the right she would rejoice.

In her heart burnt highest aim,
Ne'er on her should rest a blame,
Duty should each hour claim.
Now within her sunny hair
Wreathed she blossoms bright and fair,
Johnny-jumpups growing there.

Visions bright began their sway,
Dancing on their merry way
Through her mind in gay array.
Slowly fell the curly head
On the book before her spread,
Darkness o'er her eyelids shed.

Fast asleep dear Lilly lay,
While the sun's long slanting ray
Now foretold the closing day.
And the blood-red setting sun,
With his daily duty done,
Soon behind the hills was gone.

Mamma asked for Lilly dear.
"Mamma, Lilly is not here."
"Is not here? Then where, oh, where?
Call her, children, tell her come.
Let not shadows dark and gloom
Spread upon my child from home."

In the somber twilight late
Mamma wanders through the gate,
Lilly calls, disconsolate;
Calls with voice both loud and shrill.
Echo answers from the hill,
Echo only answers still.

"Search the garden all around,
Search the orchards, all the ground;
Lilly, Lilly, must be found.
John, look yonder; Mary, there,
Past the dairy, up the stair;
Look, my children, everywhere."

Gates fly open, fences fall,
Chairs lie tumbled in the hall,
Wild confusion seizes all.
Papa comes with weary limb;
Mamma, in the twilight dim—
Mamma frantic calls to him.

"Lilly's lost, our darling pet."
"Surely not," he said, but yet
Gloom upon his features set.
"Don't despair. Down in the glen
Well I'll look," said he, "and then
Find, perhaps, our child again."

Hush! 'Tis Mary's calling clear
Ringing on the evening air,
Sending welcome words of cheer.
Lilly found? Not found, but yet,
Through the grass so dewy wet,
Mary tracks the precious pet.

A little farther Mary stopped,
Saw a wild flower Lilly topped,
And a bookmark she had dropped.
Now upon this track and trace
Papa hurries on apace,
Heart and soul both in the race.

'Yond the brook was Lilly found,
Free from harm, all safe and sound,
Sleeping on the mellow ground.
Strong and loving arms then took
From that quiet, cosy nook
Little Lilly and her book.

J. E. BELL, M.D.

Emily's Carpet;

OR, "WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY."

Emily is a good-sized girl, smart and energetic, and, more than all, she is a living girl to-day, and this that I am going to relate is a true story.

Emily thought she would like to weave an old-fashioned rag carpet, such as her mother used to weave in a loom by hand—and, by the way, these "rag carpets" are the original of all the handsome Persian, moquettes, Brussels, ingrain, and other carpets that are common in our time. Away back in the past there were no carpets, and kings, even, had their floors nicely covered with straw and thought it quite good enough, because they had never seen or heard of any other sort of carpet. It was once the pride of housekeepers to hav the floor scrubbed white, and nicely sanded with fine white sand, and this was supposed to be good enough for anybody. The first rag carpet was probably considered a marvel of beauty, industry, and patience, and without doubt it was thought almost too nice to walk upon.

Well, as I said, Emily thought she would like to weave a carpet. She had the material for the carpet, but no loom, which was the important adjunct.

She thought and thought, and finally surprised Sam, her brother, and the other members of the family, by saying, "I'll make a loom."

"You'll kill yourself," said Sam.

"Guess not," said Emily; "I'm not killed so easily."

Ed, another brother, told her to go ahea and build the loom, and gave her the use of the workshop for that purpose. So she cleaned up the shop, and went to work, made the loom, and set it up all right. Then she had to make a harness for the loom, and she traveled all over San Francisco—for Emily livs in California—to find a reed. At last she found one at the Golden Gate Woolen Mill, just what she wanted, exactly. The next thing that she needed was a warper. She knew how the old-style warping-bars were made, but with them the warp had to be looped on the hands and then it was necessary to hav another person to hold it, and still another to hold the rake, and one more to turn the beam to run the warp on, making three to do one particular thing. Emily wanted to invent something whereby she could do it all herself. She studied over the matter for a week, for she did not care to start her weaving apparatus until she had her model complete. She was bound to accomplish what she had undertaken, and she hardly ate or slept, and looked pale and bad; indeed, she lost ten pounds of flesh that week.

Sam said he would break the old loom up and burn it, for he was afraid the worrying over it would kill his sister. Emily said, "Just giv me one more day, for I know I can do it."

That night she lay awake till three o'clock thinking and pondering. She said she thought her head would burst, for when she would think she had one thing all right, then something else about the machine would be out of fix. The great trouble was how to pick up the leece at one end and hav the cross on the other end of the warp, and then hav it so it would wind off the frame on the beam for weaving all at one time. How to do it came to Emily toward daylight, all at once, like a flash.

Out of bed she bounded, and, taking some stiff pasteboard, made the model in a jiffy, wound on the thread, picked up the leece at the first start, and at the last end made the cross in the thread. She then unwound it and found it was all right and no mistake.

The next morning she took her model downstairs and showed it to the folks.

"Well! well! well!" said Sam. "I never saw the like! If you don't beat all the girls I ever came across!"

Emily ate a good breakfast that morning and marched proudly into the carpenter's shop with her model, and commenced work on the frame. It took her three days to make it, and the way she made the saws, hammer, chisels, and jack-planes fly around was a caution to carpenters.

Then she went into the blacksmith's shop that was on the premises, struck up a fire, got some iron, and made some bolts to hold the frame together.

A lady who was boarding in the house where Emily livs, observing the smoke issuing from the smithy's shop, thought the building must be on fire, and ran out to see. When she reached the building, there stood Emily, as calm as you please, in her old dress and strong apron, blowing the bellows, heating her irons, and looking as grave as a judge. When the iron was red-hot she took it out of the fire and commenced to hammer away upon it, like a man. The woman was highly amused, and sat right down on the floor and laughed as hard as she could.

"I should like to know, Miss Emily," said she, "if there is anything you cannot do?"

"Always do what I undertake," replied Emily, grimly.

When she was through with her blacksmithing she was rather tired and thought she would quit work for that day; so she went in the house, changed her dress, and sat down to the piano and played a few tunes for recreation. While she was playing, Mrs. S. came in the parlor, and stared at Emily.

"I never should think," said she, "that you were the same girl I saw blacksmithing a couple of hours ago."

"I'm the same one," remarked Emily, demurely, as she dashed off a few notes of an opera, and then commenced singing:

"I'm Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines,
I feed my horse on pork and beans!"

Well, the next day she finished the frame, warped the piece, and commenced weaving the carpet. In seven days it was all completed, and it was nicely, neatly, evenly, and handsomely done. If she had worked upon it steadily, it would not hav taken so long a time as that to do it, but she did not hurry about it.

She sold the carpet for eleven dollars. She spread the money out before Sam, who was as delighted as Emily.

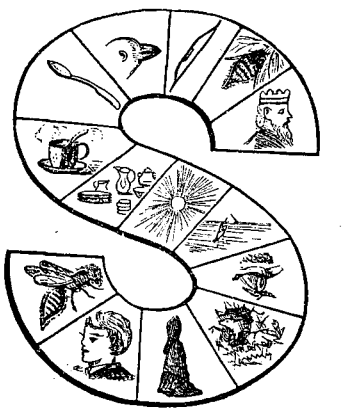
"There, Sam," said she, "I earned that money, all myself; and, besides, I hav become an inventor."

"Well, you always were smart," said Sam. "But wouldn't some of your friends hav laughed to hav seen you carrying your tools and things back and forth, sometimes in your arms and sometimes in a wheelbarrow, with your dog trotting at your heels?'

"They would hav thought I had some perseverance, I guess."

"I didn't think you would finish the carpet, though, one spell," remarked Sam, "there were so many obstacles in your path."

"Obstacles exist to be overcome," said Emily, "and I hav often told you the truth that 'Where there's a will, there's always a way' I wanted to see what I could do at hand-loom weaving, and I hav done just what I thought I could."



Our Puzzle Box.

1.—ARITHMETICAL.

A says to B, "Giv me $5 and I will hav twice as much money as you." "No," says B; "giv me $5 and then we will each hav the same amount."

How much had each? WM. SCOTT.

2.—LETTER "S" REBUS.

Thirteen words of two syllables each.

3.—CONUNDRUM.

What terrible weapons of war do you behold here?

JUST for fun, write your age in years on a slate or piece of paper—never mind the months, weeks, and days. Multiply the same by two; add to that result the figures 3768; then add two, and divide the sum by two. From this result subtract the number of your years, and perhaps you will be surprised at the figures thus obtained. Try it.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, DEC. 5, 1885.

1.—Do right, because it is right. This is true philosophy.

2.—Hypocrite.

3.—
P a n i C
E x t r A
R e g a L
P r a t E
E i k o N
T i r e D
U l t r A
A l t e R
L a i r S

4.—Investigate before you (ewe) invest.

5.—Hold the numbers before a mirror, and you can read the Latin adage: "Sic transit gloria mundi"—Thus passes the glory of the world.

Solvers.—E. Bambach, G. W. Williams.

Correspondence.

LOGANSPORT, IND., Dec. 7, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav seen a good many letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER from little folks and I thought I would like to write one. I hav one of your books, "Story Hour." I take it to school and my teacher reads stories from it to the scholars.

Mr. Reynolds was here with his tent last summer. Papa and mamma and I went to all his lectures; we liked him, and Mr. Tilney's singing also. Mr. Tilney took supper with us one evening, and he went to a little picnic we had in the woods the Sunday he was here. I do not know where he is now, but I would like to hear from him. My letter is getting too long, I will close now.

Yours respectfuly, DELIA STOLL.

[We are pleased to hear from Delia, and hav added her name to our list of good girls, and we shall always be glad to hear from her. If Mr. Tilney should see her letter above, he will perhaps write to her.—ED. C.C.

WESTBORO, MASS, Nov. 29, 1885.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I rec'd your letter in due time, and was very glad to hear from you. I liked those cards which you sent, and I thank you for them. I hav none like them. I was sorry to hear that your mother had been sick, and hope this will find you all well. We are all quite well except Willie, who has a sore eye, and has to stay home from school and near a shade.

We are going to hav a Christmas concert at our church, and I am going up to the chapel Thursday to get a piece to speak.

Did yau hav a pleasant Thanksgiving? We invited to ladies who liv down stairs to spend the day with us, and we had quite a pleasant time. In this letter I will send you a picture, and I hope you like it. Giv my love to poor mother and Mrs. Phillips, and good bye, with much love from your little friend,

ELIZA MAY ALEXANDER.

[Thanks, Eliza, for your letter, and the pretty picture. We are all well now, and hope this may find Willie and all the family in good health. Baby Lillian will also accept our thanks for her photograph. She is a bright attractiv child, and so is little Mattie Elisa, Mrs. Slenker's grand girlie, who has also favored us with her likeness, for which she has our thanks.—ED C. C.]

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.

ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet. 302 State street., and Brentano Bros , Chicago.

INDIANA.
J R Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSAOHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.

OHIO
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single copies, 20 cents. Eight copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTHSEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE STORY HOUR.

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

BY SUSAN H. WIXON.

Author of APPLES OF GOLD, ALL IN A LIFETIME, Etc.

WITH NEARLY ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS.

PRICE $1.25.

"Between the dark and the daylight, when the night begins to lower, Comes a pause in the day's occupations that is known as the children's hour."

LONGFELLOW.

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED BY THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.

TESTIMONIALS:

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B C. on up to 1883, all in a nut-shell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1 00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SEND TO ELMINA FOR THEM.

DIANA.—A startling book! Original in theory, scientific in treatment, and unobjectionable in language. None should marry without reading "Diana." Sexual satisfaction through magnetic influence. Love rendered permanent and lasting. Third edition, enlarged, revised, and improved. Price, 25 cents.

SOCIOLOGY.—Consisting of essays, poems, short lives of Land Reformers and other reforma ory topics; worth $2; bound in cloth and sold for 50 cents. Written by Masquerier, a good old man who has spent a lifetime in trying to help humanity.

THE DARWINS.—By Elmina. Price, 50 cents. "I have read 'The Darwins,' and am pleased with it; and so are all to whom I have lent it. Were such works more plenty, Christians would be less numerous."—D. Nielson. Three books for $1 00, and Green's Freethought Directory, price, $2 00, sent also for $1 10 $2 10 for all four.

Address MRS. E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.

A NEW DEPARTURE in Medical Science. The method of special day and night treatment is the only one that gives prompt and permanent relief in cases of Epilepsy. Two trial Bottles sent free. FITS EPILEPTIC REMEDY CO., 47 Broad St. N. Y.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

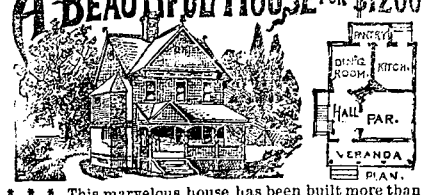
A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
The Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,



HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M D., LL D.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

A BEAUTIFUL HOUSE FOR $1200

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st fl or shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney. Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 30 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study, the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FALSE CLAIMS.

—BY—

J. E. REMSBURG.

Revised and Enlarged.

Price, 10 CTS SINGLY; 75 CTS. PER DOZ.

AS A

MISSIONARY DOCUMENT

IT IS UNEXCELLED.

Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are:

The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

These pamphlets should be circulated by the thousand. Let every reader send for a dozen at least. Address

THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK

Two New Pamphlets

BY

CHARLES WATTS.

The American Secular Union: Its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands.

(Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.)

CONTENTS:

Introduction. (I.) The Necessity for the American Secular Union having Principles upon which all [Secularists] can agree. (II.) The Twofold Nature of the Advocacy Adopted by the Union. (III.) The Catholicity of the Nine Demands and the Ground to be Covered. (IV.) An Exposition and Defense of Each of the Nine Demands. (V.) An Appeal to Secular Fidelity.

32 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

SECULARISM: Destructiv and Constructiv.

CONTENTS:

Introduction. Secularism: Its Nature and Necessity. Its Destructiv Aspect. (1) Biblical Idolatry. (2) Natural Depravity (3). Theological Supremacy. (4) The Alleged Fall and Redemption of Man. The Constructiv Aspect of Secularism. (1) That the True Guide in Human Actions is Reason Assisted by Experience. (2) That Supreme Attention Should be Given to the Facts and Duties of Existence, Regardless of any Considerations of a Life Beyond the Present. (3) That Science is a more Trustworthy Provider for Man than Relying for Help from any Supernatural Power. (4) That Morality is of Natural Growth, and has no Necessary Connection with Any of the Theologies of the World. (5) That the Best Preparation for a Life Superior to this is the Wisest and Noblest Use of the Existence We Now Hav.

22 pages in cover. Price Ten Cents.

Poetry.

The Order of Ages.

Man's Bible true is nature's mount,
By science' light we read it well;
No falsehood mars the true account
There kept for us who on it dwell.
In perfect order there unfurled,
We trace the progress of the world.

Its vast material wonders yet,
And pictured histories of stone,
Yet glow, like gems in order set,
With records of the days bygone,
Footprints of ages on the earth,
Ere history was, or man had birth;

When, roaring round the basal rock,
The pent-up surges sounded hoarse;
Ere lightning's flash, or thunder's shock,
Had, for the waters, cleft a course;
Before, beneath the sun's bright ray,
The mollusk spanned its toilsome way.

Throughout the old red sandstone time,
When vegetable life was seen:
When, rising from old ocean's slime,
The agil fish filled sea and stream.
In various forms, rejoicing, rife,
And all the waters teemed with life.

Then soon the marshy fens were crowned
With giant ferns, exalted, high,
While monstrous reptils, crawling round
Their bases, sought their food supply,
Or, on their brethren breaking fast,
In anger, snatched their fierce repast.

Overwhelmed beneath the murky wave,
The giant forests sunk in rest,
And earth, within her darksome cave,
Gave them the shelter of her breast,
To form within her furnace hurled,
The motor of a future world.

Thus, in a wild and wondrous way,
Great Nature's Bible tells the tale;
Progress is writ on granit gray,
And on the flower that decks the vale,
It fills the universal plan,
And the whole scheme seems crowned by man!

Man's Bible true is nature's mount,
By science' light we read it well;
No falsehood mars the true account
There kept for us who on it dwell.
In perfect order there unfurled,
We trace the history of the world!

Opinions of New Books.

SABBATH-BREAKING. Origin of the Sabbatic Idea.—The Jewish Sabbath.—Examination of Sunday Arguments.—Origin of the Christian Sabbath.—Testimony of the Christian Fathers.—The Sabbath During the Middle Ages.—The Puritan Sabbath.—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines.—Abrogation of Sunday Laws. By John E. Remsburg. Large 12mo., 83 pp.; handsome print. New York: The Truth Seeker Co., 33 Clinton Place.

I hav read your new book on "Sabbath Breaking," tracing your argument from beginning to end. How relentlessly cruel you are in not leaving the Sabbatarians a leg to stand on!

Christian Sabbatarianism, which attaches a sanctity to the first day of the week that the other days do not possess, is a peculiar and unique system of religion and morals in the history of the world. Just see what, in its super-abounding impudence, it did, and does. It took the liberty of changing the time of the divinely-appointed Jewish Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, after completely shearing it of its character as a simple day of rest from labor for men and animals, and converting it into a day of going to church to listen to sermons. In 1876 it shut the doors of our Centennial Exhibition, to all except deadheads, on Sunday, and prevented from seeing and studying its interesting objects thousands of people who were employed all the week in labor and could not enjoy that right unless they did so on Sunday. It has imprisoned in times past, and now fines, farmers who to save their crops in a wet season bring them into the barn on Sunday. In all our large cities it shuts up museums of natural history, galleries of art, and other places of instruction and recreation on the only day in the week the laboring classes could visit them, and when it is the public money which helps to sustain these institutions. It partially closes the people's post-offices, and has been struggling for years to stop entirely, not only the mail trains, but the passenger and freight trains on the railroads which pursue their vocations as common carriers on Sunday. It has embodied itself in the laws of England, and of this country, and tramples down the natural, social, and business rights of subject and citizen alike. It is now making war in all our cities against Sunday newspapers, because they invite the people to a more profitable entertainment than they could find in going to the churches and listening to the cold discussion of moth-eaten and worn-out topics of dogmatic medieval theology. It even punishes the barbers who shave and clean up the workingmen, so that they may make a decent appearance on the street on Sunday, or go with their wives and children on some pleasure excursion, after laboring all the week in grimy, ill-ventilated factories.

All these and many other outrages Sabbatarianism commits, and for doing so it has not one jot or tittle of authority in the Bible from the first verse in Genesis to the last word in Revelation. The daughter, Sabbatarianism, is more arrogant than the mother, Superstition. The church has everywhere made war upon science, but she has good Bible reason and authority to do so. Astronomy upsets the doctrin of Genesis that the earth is flat, is the center of the universe, and that the sun, moon, and stars revolve round it to enlighten it. Geology givs the lie to its "inspired" teaching that the earth was created out of nothing, less than six thousand years ago. Paleontology proves that it was not woman who, in the Garden of Eden, introduced death into the world, but that animals of all kinds, whose remains are coffined in the rocks, lived and died millions of years ago. Chemistry is under the Bible ban also, because it demonstrates the absurdity of the cardinal doctrin of religion that the identical bodies of the saints are to be resurrected from the dead after they hav been converted, by the law of change, into countless other forms of vegetable and animal life. Evolution, like dynamite, blows up the foundation of the whole theory of the fall of man, and his recovery by the church and its doctrins of faith. No wonder, then, that the church has been and is in constant war with science. But Sabbatarianism, as you hav shown in your book, stands before the world with a heart and will of iron and a face of brass, exercising over men, governments, and institutions a power for which it has not one shred or patch of authority, either in the teaching and example of Christ and his apostles, or that of the Continental reformers of the sixteenth century, but in diametrical opposition to both. Sabbatarianism is a hybridous monster begotten and born several hundreds of years since, in the British Isles, and was the unnatural offspring of the adulterous connection of church and state. It came to this country with the Puritans, and, with their blood and notions, has extended its sway all over the land, till we are now a subject people. You hav done well, therefore, in bringing your batteries to bear upon it.

It would be superfluous in me to say that I am in favor of Sunday as a day of rest, of recreation and enjoyment after the toil of the week, and, if the people please, of hearing lectures and sermons. It is only the unwarranted claim which Sabbatarianism makes of the peculiar sacredness of the first day of the week that I oppose. It has no more authority from reason and the Bible to make such exactions as it does than the Catholic church has to make it a sin for a man to eat flesh meat on Friday. A. B. BRADFORD.

Enon Valley, Dec. 1, 1885.

This is a real gem of a book. Just what is needed to show to the world the imposition of the Sabbath laws. and that they work solely in the interest of the clergy and the churches, and that the poor are the actual sufferers by the enforcement of Sabbath laws preventing all amusements and the opening of public institutions of interest and instruction on this day. The wealthy hav home amusements and books and papers, and a thousand modes of passing the hours agreeably indoors, that the poor are deprived of.

Incidents are related in the book showing that Sabbath-breaking is often more surely and severely punished than murder. Remsburg says:

"Three thousand years ago, for a trifling violation of this law a man was stoned to death. The one who had been chosen to proclaim the law, and who in this case was its executor, was an unpunished murderer."

This book givs the origin of the Sabbatic idea—the Jewish Sabbath and the Christian Sabbath—and shows up many instances where Sabbath-breaking was cruelly punished, though the "criminals" were really engaged in humane and charitable work.

It is a perfect magazine of facts and arguments against the enforcement of laws making this one day in seven a holy day.

One incident is imagined as occurring during the prevalence of the rigid Sunday law that forbids parents to kiss their children on the Sabbath. He says, "A little child stretched upon a bed of mortal sickness might throw its loving arms around its mother's neck and crave with its last breath her farewell kiss. and to grant that dying child's request would be a violation of these Sabbatarian laws." Think of it, friends! A pious mother, fearing her God, loving her child, and not daring to kiss it lest she incur that God's wrath, and cause him in his anger to send the little darling to hell as a punishment for her sin.

We need just 200,000,000 of these books to convince the world of the sin and wickedness of the Sabbath laws, as they are now and to-day. Speaking of the clergy, Parker Pillsbury says: "With their holy day must go their holy office, and with it their holy and reverend selvs."

All honor to our Remsburg, and success to his little giant of a book, "Sabbath-Breaking."

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS, and Other Lectures. By Helen H. Gardener, with an Introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place.

The author is defiantly in open rebellion against the Gods in heaven and the peculiar methods of their peculiar people on earth. The book is more than a protest; it is an exposure and refutation of supernaturalism—the Pandora's Box of human misery. The writer never forgets the infinit wrongs perpetrated upon woman, in the name of the gods, simply because she was woman. Hers is a magnificent battle, against time-honored customs and doctrin and the sanctions of heaven, for the rights of her sex. She has acquitted herself splendidly. The work abounds in humor and wit. It would, however, be impossible in a brief note to do justice to it. Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER would do well to supply themselvs with a copy, to keep at hand, for it is not a production that can be skimmed through at one reading. I predict for it a permanent place in the literature of Freethought. The frontispiece, although fairly good, does not do justice to the original. The introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll is one of his literary gems—and therefore needs no words of praise.

W. S. BELL.

It is a new departure for a woman to write such a book as this so well calculated to upset established theories. The church has claimed to be the educator and elevator of woman, but the author emphatically denies this and even dares to doubt the plenary inspiration of the Old Testament. It may be quite bad enough for a man to linger on the abyss of skepticism, but for a woman to deny what has been so long accepted as truth, is well calculated to alarm the faithful sentinels on the walls of Zion. Those who are not afraid to gratify their curiosity at the expense of settled convictions can get the book at the Truth Seeker office at 33 Clinton Place. New York, by remitting one dollar.—R. I. Pendulum.

Miss Gardener is one of the increasing number of women who hav discovered that gods of the masculin gender hav always been particularly oppressiv to women, and she writes with a power and plainness of speech on this subject that rivals Colonel Ingersoll's masterly attacks on the idols of superstition. The book is divided into three parts: First, "Men, Women, and Gods." Second, "Vicarious Atonement." Third, "Historical Facts and Theological Fictions," with an appendix, the whole covering 157 pages, and making a book which every Infidel in the country will read with pleasure and profit.—Winsted Press.

"Men, Women, and Gods," by Helen Gardener, is a book we should like to commend to our readers, especially our readers of the gentler sex. Dear, trustful woman, whose confiding innocence and artless virtue impel her so frequently down the track of vice and misery, believes the Bible is her friend, because the priest tells her so. The priest further tells her that it is to the Christian faith she owes all the delicacy and dignity which distinguish her position from that of the squaw, and the poor dear soul believes that baseless falsehood, and in gratitude goes to church to help the Beetle-of-God with his psalm-singing incantations, and teaches the child at her knee to say "Our Father which art in heaven" with a tenderness, a beauty, and a pathos which imprint a religious prejudice for life.

If woman's head were as prone to think as her heart is ready to feel, this sort of thing would suddenly come to an end, and the priest would hav to giv up his superstitious mummeries, and betake himself to an honest calling Miss Gardener's book is a valuable contribution to the bringing about of this most desirable consummation. It is, moreover, not a stiff and didactic performance, but is facetious, anecdotal, easy, eloquent, and eminently readable. As a rule, when a lady writes a book she does not write it over well; but Miss Gardener takes her place among the more brilliant exceptions to the rule. If she has not been born with a pen in her hand, she has been born with fingers with a special aptitude for handling one. Her portrait embellishes the frontispiece of her volume, and it is not the portrait of a blue-stocking or a scrag, but of an exceedingly sweet-featured, refined, and charming young woman. Over her strong and yet delicate brow there fall clusters of careless curls, and over her finely chiseled features there lies just the soupcon of the "pale cast of thought"—just enough to impart a classic grace, but not sufficient to mar the tenderness and spirituelle. The lady seems to be a personal friend of Colonel Ingersoll, who writes a very pretty and appropriate "Introduction" to the volume; and we envy the gallant colonel the charm of such a friendship. —London Secular Review.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM. The Present and Future Republic of North America.

The above is the title of a new book written by "A Capitalist," and published by The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. It is altogether hypothethical and theoretical, but is strongly written. The author evidently clearly understands the primary principles of a truly republican government as well as the social relations of the people. As to the present status of American government, reasoning from the standpoint of the political economist, the author undoubtedly proves himself complete master of his theme; while his speculations as to the future delineate a government composed by a prosperous, thrifty, intelligent, and happy people. The author, when he raises the tight-drawn veil from over the dim and uncertain future, reveals a new republic, in which nothing but that which tends to the elevation and enlightenment of the people holds sway. Religion is no longer fettered by hide-bound dictums and dogmas molded and formed in superstitions; on the contrary, it stands forth as a thing rational in all its bearings, and capable of being understood by all; hence the people are all honest and true to each other—so much so that courts and jails are only known through the pages of history. Marriage is considered a mere civil contract to be dissolved at the will of either of the contracting parties; yet the people are happy in the sacred union, and divorces are seldom heard of. Why? Because husbands and wives are more considerate of each other.

Finally, we consider the book to be one of considerable merit and well worth the time required to peruse its pages. It is sold by the publishers at $1.50.—Sunday Gazetteer.

SOCIAL WEALTH: The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment. By J. K. Ingalls, New York, The Truth Seeker Company. Price, $1.

This book is from the pen of J. K. Ingalls, and is entitled "Social Wealth: the Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in its Acquirement and Apportionment." The table of contents introduces the reader to a wide range of subjects, each of which is extensivly treated. Among them, Economic Schools, a brief review of their origin and growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Lands; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-Operation; Law of Contracts; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators, making a book of 320 pages with an appendix containing a summary of definitions "economic and isonomic." The two books ("Social Wealth" and "Rational Communism") would be a fit and acceptable present to any family, the two heads of which are worthy of the compliment which such a present delicately implies.—Winsted Press.

A good preface is a good guaranty of a good book, and here is the opening passage of this work which will giv a very accurate general idea of the work itself.

"The purpose for which these pages are offered to the public is simply to direct inquiry to questions related to all human life and employment, so that no useful member of society need remain indifferent to them. We are living under a system of capitalistic aggrandizement, or commercial monarchism, which has no parallel in the history of the race. Our teachers in economics do not disavow, if they do not expressly put forth, the claim that this impoverishment of the many to enrich the few is in accordance with the orderly evolution of society, and in harmony with the natural laws of trade."

Winter is just here, the season for organizing literary and debating societies, and this work has come just in time for those who wish to post themselvs on the economic questions, which a grinding system of government is forcing the people to consider. The young men who master the questions discussed in this book are bound to be the leaders in these societies.—Nonconformist.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MONKS, POPES,
AND
THEIR POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A LARGE NUMBER OF THIS BOOK, SOME OF THEM DAMAGED. WHICH WE WILL SELL AT GREATLY REDUCED RATES THE OBJECT OF THE WORK IS TO SHOW THE POLITICAL NATURE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND ITS TREASONABLE DESIGNS WITH REGARD TO THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC.

Price, 50 cents, 75 cents, and $1.00, according to condition of book.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY
BETTER THAN
Eternal Punishment.

BY M. BABCOCK.

The subjects discussed in this finely-printed pamphlet are, besides the title above given, Satan and Hades, Some Reasons Why I am Not a Christian, Divinity of the Bible, Theological Logic, Preachers are Not Honest, Preachers Sometimes Differ, Infant Damnation, Prayer, The Cloak of Charity, The Clergy were Afraid, No Fear of Being Damned, But What are We to Do? But Why Should I Be Damned? Why Not Pray for the Damned? Conclusion.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

SABBATH-BREAKING.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

AUTHOR OF "LIFE OF PAINE," "FALSE CLAIMS," "BIBLE MORALS," ETC.

This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view.

LARGE AND HANDSOME PRINT.

The question is discussed under the following heads:

Origin of the Sabbatic Idea—The Jewish Sabbath—The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath—Examination of Sunday Arguments—Origin of Christian Sabbath—Testimony of the Christian Fathers—The Sabbath during the Middle Ages—The Puritan Sabbath—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines—Abrogation of Sunday Laws.

Price, 25 Cents; Six Copies, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

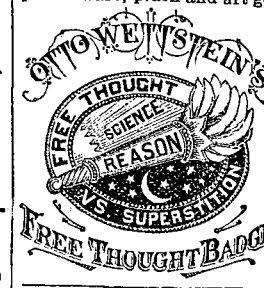
CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.

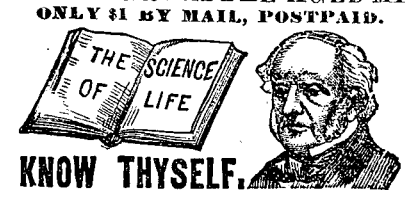


BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Holiday Goods!



All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3 50, $4 With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14 is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catchpenny get-up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magneric appliance, but simply a medicine to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1v

---

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address [illegible]

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY
A Collection of Passages
Illustrating the
Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Gems of Thought.

WHEN an Atheist brings a suit against a Christian and in a Christian court he cannot expect to receive impartial justice.—D. M. Bennett.

THAT the orthodox, the believers in revelation and in miracles, should brandish their repugnance and its accompanying weapon, ridicule, against Darwin's theory, is perfectly intelligible. They know what they are about and hav good reason, too, in combating to the uttermost a principle so inimical to them. But those sarcastic newspaper writers, on the other hand—do they, then, belong to the faithful? Certainly not, as regards the vast majority; they swim with the stream of the times and hav nothing to say to miracles or to the intervention of a creator in the course of nature. Very well; how, then, do they explain the origin of man, the evolution of the organic from the inorganic, if they find Darwin's explanation so ludicrous? Do they intend evolving primeval man, a human organism, however rude and unformed he be, immediately from the inorganic—the sea, the mud of the Nile, etc? They are hardly so daring; but do they realize that the choice only lies between the miracle—the divine artificer—and Darwin?—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

IT is of no use to persuade ourselvs, as some hav done, that we possess the best work of men untimely slain. Had Sophocles been cut off in his prime, before the composition of "Œdipus;" had Handel never merged the fame of his forgotten operas in the immortal music of his oratorios; had Milton been known only by the poems of his youth, we might with equal plausibility hav laid that flattering unction to our heart. And yet how shallow would hav been our optimism, how fallacious our attempt at consolation! There is no denying the fact that when a young Marcellus is shown by fate for one brief moment and withdrawn before his spring-time has brought forth the fruits of summer, we must bow in silence to the law of waste that rules inscrutably in nature.—Symonds's Shelley.

ACCORDING to the Trinitarian scheme, one part of God is represented by a dying man and another part, called the Holy Ghost, by a flying pigeon, but it is utterly impossible that anything worthy of the name of belief can attach itself to such wild and high-flying conceits.—Paine's Age of Reason.

AS the faculties of the mind are supposed to be naturally alike in every individual—otherwise nothing could be more fruitless than to reason or dispute together—it were impossible, if men affix the same ideas to their terms that they could so long form different views on the same subject; especially when they communicate their views and each party turn themselvs on all sides in search of arguments which may giv them the mastery over their antagonists. It is true that if men attempt the discussion of questions which lie entirely beyond the reach of human capacity, such as those concerning the origin of worlds, or the economy of the intellectual system or region of spirits, they may long beat the air in their fruitless contests, and never arrive at any determinate conclusion. But if the question regard any subject of common life and experience, nothing, one would think, could preserve the dispute so long undecided but some ambiguous expressions which keep the antagonists still at a distance and hinder them from grappling with each other. This has been the case in the long disputed question concerning liberty and necessity; and to so remarkable a degree that, if I be not much mistaken, we shall find that all mankind, both learned and ignorant, hav always been of the same opinion with regard to this subject and that a few intelligible definitions would immediately hav put an end to the whole controversy.—Hume's Liberty and Necessity.

AS man did not come forth from the hand of God, but arose from the depths of nature, his first estate was not paradisaical, but almost brutal. Neither, of course, did he in our eyes fall with the first step and thus forfeit paradise. He did not begin his career on a great elevation, to sink very low immediately afterward; on the contrary, he began very low, to rise, although very slowly, yet gradually to even greater hights. By this means alone he is included in the universal law of development, from which the Christian conception withdraws him at the very first.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

SO must men struggle for intellectual liberty. You must be willing to risk discord in your family, to risk a name and place and reputation and giv up all but your own self-consciousness of right if you would buy the highest prize, inward calm and peace.—Felix Adler, Radical Pulpit.

NOT to speak even of such books as the Revelation of St. John, and most of the prophets of the Old Testament, let it not be deemed that Lessing's "Nathan" or Goethe's "Herman and Dorothea" are more difficult of comprehension and contain fewer "saving truths" than an epistle of Paul or a discourse of Christ as reported by John. Let it be specially considered whether if our peasant children should be less plagued in the village school with the geography of Palestine and the history of the Jews, with unintelligible articles of faith, and indigestible precepts, there would be all the more time to educate them so as to awaken their interest in the intellectual life of their own people and to lead them on to draw for themselvs from such abundant sources of culture.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

IT has been by wandering from the immutable laws of science and the right use of reason and setting up an invented thing, called "revealed religion," that so many wild and blasphemous conceits hav been formed of the almighty. The Jews hav made him the assassin of the human species to make room for their religion; the Christians hav made him the murderer of himself and the founder of a new religion to supersede and expel the Jewish religion. And to find pretense and admission for these things, they must hav supposed his power and wisdom imperfect or his will changeable; and changeableness of the will is the imperfection of the judgment. The philosopher knows that the laws of the creator hav never changed, with respect either to the principles of science or the properties of matter. Why, then, is it supposed that they hav changed with respect to man?—Paine's Age of Reason.

Standard and Classical Works.

Any of the following books will be sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address The Truth Seeker Co., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

LOCKHART'S SPANISH BALLADS AND SOUTHEY'S CHRONICLES OF THE CID. 75c.
LIFE AND REMAINS OF JNO. CLARE. 75c.
ROMANCE OF HISTORY—ENGLAND. 75c.
" " " —INDIA. 75c.
" " " —ITALY. 75c.
" " " —SPAIN. 75c.
BEAUTIES OF GERMAN LITERATURE, as shown by the works of Pichler, Zschokke; Richter, and Tieck. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF CHAS. MACKAY. 75c.
JOHNSON'S LIVES OF THE POETS. 75c.
LEGENDARY BALLADS OF ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF POPE, memoir. 50c.
" " " " portrait. 75c.
DANTE'S VISION OF HELL, PURGATORY, ETC. 12mo, g.e., gold stamp on side and b'k. $1.
LIVES OF EMINENT NOVELISTS AND DRAMATISTS. By Sir Walter Scott. 75c.
ESSAYS ON CHIVALRY, ROMANCE, AND DRAMA. By Sir Walter Scott. 75c.
EVERY-DAY BOOK OF MODERN LITERATURE. Short readings from best authors. 75c.
HOMER'S ODYSSEY. Trans. by Pope. 75c.
CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND. From Edw. I. to Henry VII. By Hallam. 75c.
CHILDREN OF THE ABBEY. 50c. With gold stamp on back. 85c.
PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. 12mo. gilt back. 75c.
VANITY FAIR. 12mo. Gold stamp on side and back. 75c.
ADDISON'S SPECTATOR. Satirical, moral, critical, etc. Gilt back. 75c.
SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 75c,
LORENTO'S AMATEUR AMUSEMENTS. Gilt stamp on back and sides. 75c.
ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES. Illus. Gold stamp on back and side. 85c.
FANCY'S FROLICS, OR XMAS STORIES. Farley. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
100 YEARS OF A NATION'S LIFE. With addresses of Washington and Jackson. Lives of all the presidents. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
TALES FROM SHAKSPERE. By Lamb. Illus. Gold stamp on back and side. $1.
THE SKETCH-BOOK. By Washington Irving. Gold stamp on back and side. 85c.
OUR RED-COATS AND BLUE-JACKETS. War Pictures by Land and Sea. Illus. 75c.
OLIVER TWIST. By Charles Dickens. Illus. Gold stamp on back and sides. 75c.
SCOTTISH CHIEFS. By Jane Porter. Illus. 85c.
NAPOLEON AND HIS CAMPAIGNS. Graphic account of his armies and generals. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
WILLY REILLY AND HIS COLLEEN BAWN. Gold stamp on back and side. 85c.
POETICAL WORKS OF JEAN INGELOW. Gilt edge, stamp on back and side. $1.
ADV. OF GIL BLAS. Smollett. 58 illus., gold stamp on back and side. $1.25.
SHAKSPERE WITH MEMOIR. Gold stamp on back, 75c.
SHAKSPERE. Illus., gold stamp on back. Bds. leather back. $2.25.
SHAKSPERE'S SONNETS. By Gerald Massey. 12mo, 603p. $3.
COMPLETE DRAMATIC AND POETICAL WORKS OF SHAKSPERE. With summary outline of life of poet. Port. sheep. 8vo, marbled edges. $4.75.
SHAKSPERE (13 vols. in case). 16mo, clo., $5.
HISTORY OF THE MEXICAN WAR. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
PROSE WRITERS OF AMERICA. Cheever. 75c
KINGSLEY'S NOVELS:
RAVENSHOE. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HILLYARS AND THE BURTONS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
GEOFFREY HAMLYN. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
AUSTIN ELLIOT. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
MILTON'S PROSE WORKS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
PARIS WITH PEN AND PENCIL. Bartlett. Gold stamp on back, 75c.
GEO. HERBERT'S PROSE AND POETICAL WORKS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
POPE'S POETICAL WORKS. Gilt edge. Gold back and side. $1.
SCHILLER'S POETICAL WORKS. With port. Gold stamp on back. 75c. Gilt edge, gilt stamp back and side. $1.
BRITISH FEMALE POETS. With biographical and critical notices. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF DRYDEN. Memoir. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HISTORY OF DON QUIXOTE. 75c.
TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM. Arthur. Small 12mo. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES FROM 1837–56. $1.50.
PERSONAL LIFE OF DAVID LIVINGSTONE. W. G. Blaikie, D.D., L.L.D. Port. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN. Jenkins. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
SANTA CLAUS. His friends St. Nicholas and Kriss Kringle. 3 vols. in one. Gold stamp on back and side. 75c.
VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. Goldsmith. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
FLOWERS FROM FAIRY-LAND. By A. Smith. 80 illus. Gold stamp on back and side. 75c.
FAMOUS STORIES BY THACKERAY, HAWTHORNE, ETC. Illus. Gold stamp on back and sides. 72c.
RUSSIAN FAIRY TALES. By W. R. S. Ralston, M.A. Gold stamp back and sides. 75c.
MOORE'S POETICAL WORKS. With notes Gold stamp on back. 75c.
MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF ELIZA COOK. 75c.
ADVENTURES OF AN ATOM. Gilt back and side. $1.25.
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. Dickens. Gold stamp on back and side. 75c.
GRIMMS'S FAIRY TALES. Illus. 75c.
HISTORY OF AUSTRALIA. Sidney. Illus. 75c.
THE CEDARS—MORE OF CHILD LIFE. By Ellis Gray. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR IN THE U. S. WITH PORTRAITS OF GENERALS. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
HISTORY OF GREECE. Keightly. 85c.
HISTORY OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. Including lives of Napoleon the Great, Louis Napoleon, and Prince Imperial. Gilt back. 75c.
PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIFE OF DANIEL WEBSTER. Including most of his great speeches. 2 vols. in one. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE OF ANDREW JACKSON. By Walker. Port. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE AND TIMES OF THOMAS JEFFERSON. Schmucker. Port. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Holley. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE OF COL. JOHN C. FREMONT AND HIS NARRATIV OF EXPLORATIONS AND ADVENTURES. With memoir by Schmucker. Gilt back. 75c.
AMERICAN PATRIOTISM. Speeches, letters, etc., compiled by Peabody. 60c.
THE DANITES AND OTHER CHOICE SELECTIONS. Joaquin Miller. Gilt back and side. 60c.
A GOOD FIGHT AND OTHER STORIES. Illus. Gilt back. 60c.
LIFE OF GEORGE IV. By Banvard. Gilt back. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF OWEN MEREDITH. G.e. Elaborate design in gilt on b'k and side. $1
POETICAL WORKS OF MRS. HEMANS. Memoir. G.e. Gold stamp back and side. $1.
CLEVER JACK AND OTHER TALES. By Anne Boman. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
JACK-SHEPARD. A Romance. By Ainsworth. Gold stamp on back and side. $1.
LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF HAJJI-BABA. Edited by J. Morier. Gold stamp on back 85c.
COUNT SILVIUS. A Romance from the German. By M. J. Safford. Gold stamp back and side. 60c.
OUTRE-MER. A Pilgrimage beyond the Sea, By Longfellow. 60c.
JOURNEY OF DISCOVERY ALL AROUND OUR HOUSE. Companion volume to Inquire Within Upon Everything. 60c.
BOOK OF SCOTTISH ANECDOTE. Humorous, Social, Legendary, and Historical. $1.25.
PLYMOUTH CHURCH. Its Pastor and His Accusers. Doyle. Portraits. Gilt back and side. $1.
WILD SCENES AND WILD HUNTERS. Romance of Sporting. Gilt back and side. $1.10.
IN THE CAMARGUE. Gold stamp on back. 60c.
PUBLIC AND PARLOR READINGS in Prose and Poetry. Munroe. $1.35.
BRIEF BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. Hole and Wheeler. $1.10.
SWABIAN STORIES. By Theodore Tilton. Gilt top and back. $1.50.
FREEMASON'S MONITOR. By Z. A. Davis. Port. of Jas. Page. Gold stamp on side. 85c.
FREEMASON'S MANUAL. J. How Illus. 85c.
HOME COMFORTS, OR THINGS WORTH KNOWING. $1.
TAINE'S HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. Trans. by Van Laun. 2 vols. gilt b'k. $3.50.
COMMON SENSE IN BUSINESS. $1.10.
CORRESPONDENCE AND CONVERSATIONS OF ALEXIS DE TOCQUEVILLE with Nassau William, Sr. 2 vols. Gilt back and side. $2.75.
OUR BOYS in the Army of the Potomac. Gilt back. $1.
LIFE AND MILITARY CAREER OF JEFFERSON DAVIS AND STONEWALL JACKSON. Steel engravings of each. $1.
WHITE AND BLACK. The outcome of a visit to the U. S. By G. Campbell. $1.
WILD WHITE CATTLE OF GREAT BRITAIN. By late Rev. John Storer, M.A. Gilt back and side. $1.
BLUE AND RED LIGHT, OR LIGHT AS MEDICIN. S. Pancoast Gilt back and side. 60c.
ENGLISH ECHOES OF GERMAN SONG. With 12 steel engs. Trans. by Dr. R. E. Wallace, Dr. J. D. Morrell, and F. D'Anvers. G.e. Gilt side and back. $1.25.
HOME SCENES DURING THE REBELLION. Strebor. Gilt side. 75c.
BOOK OF BEAUTY, A souvenir. 8 steel engs. G.e. Gold stamp b'k and side. 4to. 75c.
TREASURY OF ENGLISH SONNETS. Ed. by David M. Main. 12mo. 470pp. $1.75.
AMERICAN FARMER'S HANDBOOK. 400 engs. $2.50.
LIFE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH. By Agnes Strickland. $1.75.
CELEBRATED SPEECHES OF CHATHAM, BURKE, AND ERSKINE. $1.65.
PUBLIC ADDRESSES OF JOHN BRIGHT, M.P. Ed. by J. E. T. Rogers. Gilt b'k. $1.25.
LIFE AND WRITINGS OF LORENZO DOW. $1.25.
DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Reid. $1.

Odds and Ends.

WHAT, good cousin Benvolio, a faith-cured ham? Away with thee, Benvolio, away with thee.

HARRISON, the boy preacher, is only averaging a dozen converts a day. If this thing continues, he will hav to go into the retail business.

SOME one has said: "Man always gets as he givs." This may be so, but we doubt whether any benevolent Englishman will ever erect two monuments to Cyrus W. Field's memory.

A HAT manufacturer says the average Pennsylvanian's size is 6 7-8, and the average New Yorker's 7. This is all right. If the Pennsylvanian's head were larger, he would liv in New York.

A MOTHER whose crying infant made the sermon of her pastor almost inaudible was going from the church, when the clergyman spoke up, saying: "My good woman, don't go away. The baby doesn't disturb me." "It isn't for that I leave, sir," was the reply; "it's you disturb the baby!"

A CAT got into a church-organ in a Western city, and when the congregation assembled on Sunday morning and heard the frightful and plaintiv complainings of the animal issuing from the assistant worshiper, they thought a new and better organist had been engaged since the preceding Sabbath:—Norristown Herald.

NO matter how expensiv clothes they can purchase, some men are seldom known to purchase a mantle of charity.—Whitehall Times. But they will take the cloak of religion, which doesn't cost a cent, and covers a multitude of sins.—Gorham Mountaineer. Religion must be cheaper in Gorham than in Saratoga.—Saratoga Eagle.

"BEFORE I can engage you as corresponding clerk," said a business man to an applicant for a clerical position, "allow me to inquire why you write across the ruled lines instead of with them?" "Nativ and characteristic independence, sir." "Independence!" "Yes, sir. You don't suppose I am going to allow any obscure paper-maker to dictate to me how I shall write!"

BROWN: "Then you hav given up the idea of becoming a writer?" Robinson: "Yes." Brown: "But I thought you had all your plans matured, that you were going to avoid prolixity, to write nothing but short, sharp, sententious sentences, in short, that you were going to be a regular condenser?" Robinson: "Yes, that was my plan, and I attempted to carry it out." Brown: "Well?" Robinson: "Well, I set out to write, but I'm blessed if I could think of anything to condense."

"I HEAR you are without a preacher over in your congregation?" "Yes, he left two weeks ago." "Had a call at a higher salary, I presume?" "Not as I know of." "Health failed him, perhaps?" "No; his health seemed to be good." "Congregation didn't like his preaching, then?" "Yes, they seemed to." "Well, then, he resigned?" "No, not exactly. Fact was, he unloaded a lot of railroad stock on us at 74, and the shrinkage, together with some talk about tar and feathers, took him out just as the stock touched 52."

ONE sunny Sunday morning the late Rev. Samuel Hamilton found himself preaching to an attentiv congregation in a Kentucky town. It so happened that a tipsy man strayed like a black sheep into the fold; but no one objected and things ran smoothly enough. Presently a small dog entered at the open door and trotted down the aisle until it reached the front of the pulpit, when it set up a furious barking at the minister. The tipsy man, with the utmost gravity, arose and walked steadily down the aisle to where the dog was barking. Seizing the animal by the neck, he held him up before the congregation for a moment, and then, shaking him furiously, he broke out with: "Tree a preacher, will you, you ill-bred pup." This was too much for Mr. Hamilton, who could not restrain his laughter and took his seat.

BROTHER GABRIEL, a good and sensible old man, has charge of one of the colored congregations in New Orleans. Here is a portion of an exhortation which I heard him deliver at a class meeting: "Breddren an' sistern in de Lawd—Dere is big sins an' dere is little sins—stealin', lyin', killin', an' sech; dem is big sins—reg'lar busters, an' de debbel's got his speshel fryin'-pan all het up an' reddy fur dem kine ter pitch rite in an' sizzul. But den ag'in, dere's sneakiness an' cussin' an' backbitin', dat ole Mas' Deb'l ain't quite so ferce on; dese is mo' littler sins. 'Mungst de bigges' ob dese little sins is one you's all parfeck uster; yes, my breddren in de Lawd, dar's ole Unk'l Peter in dat dark corner, 'bout ter fall inter it dis blessed minnit. [Unk'l Peter tries to look solemn and sits bolt upright.] I means de sin ob gwine ter sleep in meetin'. Whiles I is rastlin' wid Satan fur yore pore mizzerbul souls, you is takin' good, comferbul little cat-naps rite in de tempul ob de Lawd, an' 'fore dese eyes, w'at is streemin' wid tears at res'in' on such desput wickedness. Bewar'! my breddren an sistern in de Lawd, les' you duz lak de giddy gal in de Testament, whar de grate 'Postle Paul wuz a-preachin' and a-strivin' wid de Sperit in de tent' story ob a high buildin'; and a giddy gal projeckin' 'bout couldn't set in her seat lak fokes God made, but mus' highst shesel', up in de windor sill, curtin' one eye at de b'ys an' tudder at de preacher, an' lettin' her min' gad 'bout an' so she 'gan ter nod, an' fus' thing everybody know'd she wuz fas' ter sleep, an' los' her balunz, an' tumble plum out'n de tent'-story winder down on to der banket (banquet) underneaf, an' lo an' beholes, wen de great 'Postle Paul an' de res' ob de breddren git down dar they picked up twelve baskits ob de fragments! Dis, my belubed breddren an' sistern, is de awful condishun dem'll fin' deyselvs in w'at take de Lawd's tempul fur a bo'din' house."—Detroit Free Press.

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

By G. F. RINEHART. Price 25 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, NEW YORK.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 12. No. 52. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, December 26, 1885. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

EDITOR COTTON, of the Vineland Rostrum, has lost his house by fire.

THE Missouri Cremation Society has four hundred members, twenty-five of whom are women.

THE Fort Worth, Texas, Gazette reports the acquittal by a jury of a man tried in that town for shaving on Sunday.

THE Union Pacific Railway Company now operates 4,499 miles of road, and either controls or has proprietary interests in 1,305 miles more; total, 5,804. In operating this system, which penetrates five states and territories, over 20,000 men are employed.

BOTANISTS are entering earnestly upon the study of bacteriology in its relations to plants. In a paper by Mr. J. C. Arthur, before the Association for the Advancement of Science, the disease known as pear blight was stated to be produced by a bacterium classified as the micrococcus amylovorous.

J. J. MCKAIN, Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Wheeling, has ordered his priests not to administer the sacrament to any Catholic who subscribed for or made a practice of reading the Irish World. He also said that no Catholic could be a dynamiter or in sympathy with any movement of that class of people.

WOMEN may now be admitted to pratice law in Oregon, the legislature having passed a bill to that effect. In the Senate there was not a vote against it, and in the house only twelve members were on the negativ. In an hour after its first introduction it had passed three readings in both branches and became a law.

MR. WALSER has procured the services of Jay Chaapel as associate editor of the Liberal, of Liberal, Mo. Mr. Chaapel is an experienced newspaper man, a pleasant writer, and an affable gentleman. He ought in conjunction with Mr. Walser to make the Liberal a very interesting and useful Freethought journal, and we believe he will.

THE Freeman's Journal of this city, in discussing Sunday concerts, says that there is nothing wrong in them, and criticizes the inconsistency of some people who attend them. "People," it says, "who would shudder publicly at the suggestion of secular music or a game of cards on Sunday night do not hesitate to amuse themselvs in all manner of secular ways on a holy day of obligation. The hypocrisy and inconsistency of 'Sabbath-keeping' are good themes for a censor of American customs."

IN some recent scientific experiment on the effects of cold two frogs were frozen solid in a temperature of 20° Fahrenheit, and kept in that condition for half an hour. On thawing slowly they recovered perfectly, but it was found that longer periods of exposure invariably killed the animals. The experiment was tried of freezing hermetically sealed meat, so as to kill its bacterial organisms, and thus render it incapable of putrefying. It was found, however, that so low a temperature as 80° below zero would not destroy the vitality of micro-organisms. It was thus made clear that the attempts to preserve meat for a long time by a momentary freezing of it must be abandoned.

THE Seventh Day Adventists in Arkansas hav been for some time annoyed with the Sunday law, which is interpreted by other Christian sects to forbid labor on Sunday. The latter seem very desirous of forcing the Adventists to rest two days in a week, or cease to respect the Sabbath of the Bible. The Adventists hav taken a case to the Supreme Court of the state to test the law. The proper way to prevent such petty meddling with the consciences or the tastes of the people, comments the Sunday Gazeteer, is to abolish all laws making any "rest" days compulsory, leaving it to each individual to "keep" any day as he pleases, so long as he does not encroach upon the rights and privileges of his neighbors. The Adventists ought to receive a decision in their favor, and will if they get justice.

A CONNECTICUT deacon received a slight injury to one of his eyes, which gave the organ a peculiar fixed expression. Hence, when he asked the village drug clerk for soda-water, that experienced person believed he recognized the mute request for superior old pale which prevails in many temperance villages. He acted on this belief. The deacon was really surprised, and flushed slightly as he drained the glass, but he has become a regular customer for "soda," and the salary of the clerk has been raised.

OUGH!

The plough boy whistled behind his plough,
For his lungs were sound and he had no cough;
He guided his team with a pliant bough,
And watered it well at a wayside trough.

The toil was hard, for the land was rough—
It lay on the shores of an Irish lough—
But his well-fed team was stout and tough,
And he plied his bough to flank and hough.

He toiled all day and the crow and cough
Flew around his head, though he oft' cried shough.
But his plough at eve struck a hidden sough
With a force that sent the share clear through.

The frightened team ran off with the plough,
With the speed of the wind from the plough boy, though
He shouted, Whoa! And into a slough
It plunged where the mud was soft as dough.

The plough boy wept, for the wreck was thorough—
He fled that night from the farm to the borough. —Boston Courier.

THE Christian Leader says of the Young Men's Christian Association that it "will hav nothing to do with Universalists except to solicit money from them, nor with Universalism, incipient or avowed, save that of condemning it as a heresy. Yet Canon Farrar comes over committed to most of the postulates which the association brands as heretical. But the prestige of his position and his personal reputation was a sore temptation, and at Detroit the association invited, what it got, a lecture from the heretical churchman! Says one of the Detroit papers: 'In the sense used by the Young Men's Christian Association Canon Farrar is not evangelical. He could not with his present beliefs become a member of the association. To make use of his fame, therefore, in order to replenish the treasury of the association is a gross inconsistency; not as gross, but of the same kind, as it would be to invite Col. Robert G. Ingersoll to lecture before the association even on a secular subject. There would be as much propriety in a total abstinence society's inviting a notorious champion of the liquor-dealers to appear for their entertainment and instruction. There is an absurdity in the affair which greatly weakens the severe orthodox position taken by the association.'"

M. GOBLET, the French minister of public worship, has notified the bishop of the Ariege department that from the 1st of December the stipends of thirty-five priests who hav compromised themselvs during the electoral period will be stopped. The charge preferred against them is that of having, "by disloyal maneuvers, sermons, insults, calumnies, and threats," sought to damage the Republican cause. The responsibility for the consequences is laid by the minister to the charge of the bishop himself, whose counsels, it is intimated, encouraged the priests in their proceedings. The bishop, in reply, after protesting against the cruelty of the measure, claims for the French priesthood the right at election time to use its influence against candidates who are notorious enemies of the Christian faith. The bishop admits further that he told the representativs of sixty-five parishes who successivly solicited from him the appointment of a priest that the only way of obtaining their wishes was to return candidates who would demand the reinstatement of the retrenched ecclesiastical credits. The bishop concludes by declaring that the clergy will not look on unconcerned when France is being diminished, the Catholic population disquieted, and God driven from their temples.

IN a recent lecture on caisson disease, Dr. A. V. Meigs relates that a visitor once opened his brandy flask while in the compressed air-chamber, and, recorking it, placed it in his pocket. When he got back to the outer air, the flask exploded with considerable violence. "No more telling story could be told," said the doctor, "than that of the brandy flask to show what must occur with every liquid and gas contained within the human economy upon coming out of the air-chamber." While under pressure none of the workmen were attacked, but on leaving the chamber they were all "chilled to the bone," and their vital energies paralyzed. The men are now kept under strict medical control while doing this work, and the percentage of mortality is stated to hav been very largely reduced.

THE Brooklyn Eagle reports that Saint Comstock is again waging war upon the picture dealers of that city. It records: "Two dealers placed in their windows a copy in photogravure of a picture by Dubufe entitled, 'Profane and Sacred Music,' the original of which was in the French Salon of 1884, where it was seen by thousands, perhaps millions, of people. The picture presents the two phrases of music under the aspect of an allegory. In an arched panel on the left a young man is seen seated on the pedestal of a statue playing a flute, while down a flight of steps behind him descend a number of nymphs waving their arms to its strains. In the foreground beside a pool is a nymph who is caressing a swan that has glided up to the edge of the marble step. The right hand space is filled with sweeping lines of architecture, suggestiv of a great temple. Slanting rays of sunlight fall athwart the columns and rest upon a group of singing angels. At an organ is seated a figure in dark relief against the glimmer of sun and seraphs' robes, her head crowned with a saintly nimbus, while along a colonnade in the distance a procession of winged spirits is seen, advancing and playing on violins. It is a picture of great beauty, and displays a vivid imagination. Mr. Comstock is represented in Brooklyn by a man and woman who notify him whenever a picture or photograph is shown in a public place that, according to their ideas, should not be displayed there. One of the art dealers received an anonymous letter in a female hand on the night that he first exhibited the picture, directing him to take it out of the window and avoid trouble. The letter was supposed to emanate from Mr. Comstock's spy, and the picture was at once removed, but on advice of an interested party it was replaced on the following day, and that brought Anthony himself around. 'Mr. ——,' he said, on entering the shop, 'you'll hav to take in that dirty picture in the window.' 'Mr. Comstock,' responded the dealer, 'the man who calls that a dirty picture has a dirty mind.' 'I didn't mean that it was exactly dirty,' said Comstock, 'but it comes under the law and you must remove it.' 'Can't we hang it in our gallery at the back of the store?' 'H'm! You can, but if you do you must be prepared for the consequences.' Comstock then went to a second dealer, who had exhibited a delicately colored copy of the same photogravure and ordered him to remove it from sight. The order was obeyed. He next went to the shop of a dealer who did not hav the picture in his possession and who has always been cautious as to the character of work exhibited in his windows and his gallery. Seeing nothing to carp at in the shop, he ascended the stairs into the frame maker's apartment, where he found a picture he objected to. 'That's not for exhibition,' said the dealer. 'That was sent here by a customer for framing. I'm not responsible for the taste of my customers. A man can hav anything he likes on his own wall.' 'No, he can't' said Comstock. 'There's a law against hanging objectionable pictures where they can be seen, and a man has no right to hang such a picture as that in his parlor.' Mr. Comstock went to New York after he had arranged the art affairs of Brooklyn and ordered the 'Profane and Sacred Music' out of a print dealer's window over there, remaining in the shop until it had been removed."

News of the Week.

UPWARDS of $111,000 has been subscribed to the Grant monument fund.

SEVERAL star pugilists, including Sullivan, hav left the ring, and are studying the peaceful art of posing as statuary in theaters.

WARD, the former partner of General Grant, has been set at treading a printing-press in the prison at Sing Sing, where he is confined.

ROBERT TOOMBS, the life-long Confederate, died last week. It is said that his last words were (to a relation), "Lend me one hundred dollars."

THE children who went from this port to Paris to be treated for hydrophobia hav reached their destination, and are in the hands of Dr. Pasteur.

GLADSTONE has come out in favor of home rule in Ireland. He says that country should hav a parliament and sovereign power to manage its own affairs.

BISHOP WIGGER, just returned from a visit to the pope, givs it as his opinion that Cardinal McCloskey's successor will be either the bishop of Boston or the bishop of Baltimore.

THE former editorial room of THE TRUTH SEEKER, at 141 Eighth street, is now occupied by a workingman's free library. The place where the composing-room was is used as a meeting room of the Central Labor Union.

THE Brooklyn and New York New England Societies hav held their annual celebrations of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. It cannot help being remarked that this event could as appropriately be celebrated on the other side of the Atlantic.

A SPECIAL agent at San Francisco reports that during the three years ending Aug. 1, 1885, the number of Chinese who left the United States was 41,322, and the number who arrived 20,077, making the exodus more than twice the immigration.

THE caving in of a coal mine at Wilkes Barre, last week, imprisoned twenty-six men, the main passage to the surface being closed by the debris. Hope of rescuing them alive is almost given up, and the men will probably meet their end through starvation or suffocation.

JOHN SWINTON, who edits a labor paper named after himself, talked by invitation last Monday to about forty ministers of this city on "The Condition of the Workingmen and the Ministers' Duty toward Them." He told them that the clergy should not always be on the side of capital.

DR. JOHN DRAPER died on Sunday, the 20th, at his residence in this city. The cause of his death was pneumonia. He was the son of Prof. John William Draper, author of the "Conflict Between Religion and Science." He had contributed largely to the literature of science and medicin.

NEAL DOW, the temperance advocate, recently alluded to Bangor, in Maine, the prohibition state, as the drunkest city on the continent. But the editor of the Bangor Commercial shows by printing the police record that Portland, where Neal Dow livs, has eight times as much drunkenness as Bangor.

IT was discovered last Saturday that John B. Mannix, the assignee of Archbishop Purcell, had withheld from his account $132,000, which he invested in government bonds. Mr. Mannix seems to be a greater fraud than the archbishop. These Catholic gentlemen show up badly as financiers when the public eye gets fixed on them.

THE Rev. Joseph Stumpe of St. Mary's church, Morrisania, and his counsel, Matthew P. Breen, hav asked the board of estimate and apportionment to appropriate $40,000 for damages done to the church property by the opening of 150th street. Nothing can excel the assurance of the churches. The board of estimate and apportionment should ask the Rev. Mr. Stumps who built the road by which St. Mary's church is reached by its congregation, and how much, in the form of taxes, the church has ever paid toward the construction of the same.

Communications.

"Danger Ahead."

An article in the Century, for November, under the above heading, by Lyman Abbott, is proof of the fact that the world still moves. It is really surprising, as matters go, that the learned doctor should have plucked up the courage to write, or the Century to publish, an article so Socialistic in its tendencies. One might readily suppose that the doctor had just arisen from an attentiv study of "Rational Communism."

But Dr. Abbott, in the article referred to, has brought prominently before the public mind a subject which, whether it would or not, in some shape it will be obliged to meet and pass judgment upon in the near future.

I refer to that never-ceasing conflict between great wealth and great poverty, which, under the prevailing property system of the world, all peoples, sooner or later, are called upon to face. How this conflict of interests has invariably been met among the nations of the Old World has been suggested in Dr. Abbott's valuable article, and may be briefly stated thus: By wresting from the people the right of self-government, through that power which wealth makes practicable, and establishing monarchical governments, bulwarked by great standing armies, to hold the oppressed in subjection under their known wrongs.

Thus this bitter conflict has invariably been waged, but thus it has not been settled, nor will it be settled thus so long as an instinctiv love of justice and liberty remains in the human soul.

The people of the Old World, at the present moment, with more unanimity of sentiment than ever before, are asking to hav given back that right of self-government which was wrested from them, and the struggle will never cease until the sacred right is restored. But what is of greater importance to us is as to how this great question of conflicting interests which has now planted itself so firmly in our pathway is to be met and disposed of in our own land. The last quarter of a century has been prolific of such wonderful changes in the pecuniary status of our people, has so widened the bonds between wealth and poverty, as to change the whole aspect of our political horizon.

The struggle between great poverty and great wealth, which has so often convulsed the nations and peoples of earth, is now squarely before us.

How is this conflict to be met? is the serious question which every lover of his country and of humanity should put to himself.

Shall it be met by opposing force to force in fraternal combat, as has been the course of nations heretofore? If so, then we hav not only the horrors of civil war to encounter, but the loss of our self-government, our republic, according to all past history, is sure to follow. Having then before them the experience of the past, it seems hardly credible that our people will be so blind as to attempt settling this question through a bloody strife between factions. There will, no doubt, be strife—earnest, determined strife—but it will be carried on as we see it now at every election, and it will be ballots, not bullets, that will decide the contest.

And he who can read aright the signs of the times, will discover that we are already upon the eve of this important conflict.

The laboring classes hav been organizing in our country for the past few years at a most tremendous rate, and, as they are vastly in the majority, what is going to hinder them when once their organization is perfected—which it is now clear will soon be the case—from electing the majority of the legislators to enact our laws, and who will be most likely to enact them in behalf of the laboring classes?

Some idea of the extent and power of the labor organization of our land may be gathered by turning our eyes upon Galveston, a city far remote from the life-throbbing center of this prodigious movement, and only reached through its arteries, but which only a few days since lay completely paralyzed, so to speak, at its behest. Were not the facts already so well known as to make it quite unnecessary, similar illustrations might be brought forward in abundance, demonstrating that this prodigious movement has extended itself and is making itself felt all over our land. And when it is remembered that it has taken but little more than a decade from its incipiency to reach its present huge proportions, we hav the data furnished us for forming some little idea of its possibilities. The Rip Van Winkles of wealth, hitherto so all-powerful, may well start up and rub their eyes in amazement to behold the change that has taken place while they hav been sleeping and dreaming of what they yet hoped to acquire and accomplish by planting their feet still a little more firmly upon the necks of their fellow-men. Yes, the signs of the times are so apparent now that no supernatural inspiration is required to discover that this great labor organization is soon to be perfected, and that when complete it is going to dictate the order of things in our land. Sell their votes will the wage-workers when once this great labor organization is perfected? Lay not the flattering unction to thy soul!

Why does the wage-worker sell his vote now? Because he believes that the three to five dollars he receives for it is really more to his benefit than any difference which may accrue to him from the result whichever candidate is elected.

Let the issue once fairly come, however, between capital and labor, wealth and poverty, and under these conditions let candidates be brought forward for election that shall represent the two factions, and rest assured there will be no selling of the votes of wage-workers. We may expect, then, that at a not very distant day the laboring classes are coming into power in our land, and that with this event will come some pretty radical changes in the enactment of our laws and the administration of our government, which will be quite sure to transform our existing industrial, financial, and social fabrics.

Dr. Abbott, in "Danger Ahead," has drawn not only a succinct and faithful picture of our existing order of society, but he has done that which is better—he has suggested the remedy for its evils and discomfiture. I trust he will take no offense from my assertion that in hinting the remedy he has fairly indorsed the essential elements of modern Socialism.

What, then, is modern Socialism? The idea which the average journalist has formed of it may be judged from the picture which he invariably draws of the Socialist, namely: A ferocious-looking biped, half clothed in rags, with a package of dynamite and a torch in one hand, a bludgeon and a long knife in the other, prowling through the country to frighten women and children.

The Century's picture of the Socialist is not true to the prevailing conception. It does not lack in determination, but is far too respectable, too refined. The description above given of the Socialist has been held up before the eyes of the community with such a persistency that no wonder the average citizen shrinks back horrified when the subject of Socialism is named in his presence. I do not deny that there is a class of mortals who call themselvs Socialists of whom the above description is a fair representation. A class, indeed, which, had it the power, would compel a division of property, or, more likely, would take it all themselvs.

But, when multitudes are out of work and cannot procure it, hav not even a chance afforded them to earn the necessities of life, and yet see around them those who never earned a dime by honest toil in all their lives luxuriating in elegance and splendor, is it to be wondered at that some should become desperate and form themselvs into such a class as that of which I am speaking? It is absurd, however, to take the crude notions, the follies, the wild rodomontade which these poor ignorant mortals so oftentimes blurt forth as an index and measure of Socialism; while, nevertheless, there is sometimes much truth embraced in their wild rantings, as it does not require any great stock of wisdom to discern what is justice, what is right conduct between man and man.

Modern Socialism, as taught by the German school, and usually accepted, I think, by American Socialists of the higher order, does not imply a division of property, or necessarily a community of property. Its distinguishing feature is that it would hav the public asssume control of its own affairs. To this end, through its chosen officers, it should assume control over that which has been given by nature to all mankind as their birthright, namely, the land; it should wholly administer the finances; should own, control, and administer all works of a public character, such as the telegraph and telephone, the railways, canals, and all other facilities of internal transportation; should furnish the facilities for supplying water and gas to the cities and towns; in short, should own, control, and regulate all important works of a public nature similar to those I hav mentioned.

This sort of Socialism, if I mistake not, is like to be brought prominently before the public mind upon the advent to power of the laboring party. I am well aware that many, both of the leaders as well as the rank and file in the labor organization, do not take the view of matters above stated. The strong and laconic remark of one of its prominent officers, that "a paternal government is an infernal government," has not escaped my notice. To this, however, I would reply that it seems to me it depends wholly upon where the power is vested. If vested in the people, the more paternal the government the better, but if vested in a monarchy, an oligarchy, or a plutocracy, then the less paternal the better. The principal object of this article is to impress upon the public mind the importance of considering as it never yet has done these great questions. Instead of ignoring or attempting to brush them aside contemptuously, they should receive the immediate attention, the careful and thorough consideration, of our statesman, philosphers, and all men of thought. Matters of public welfare which hav raised up a party in Germany casting a vote in 1871 of only 123,975, and in 1884, of about 6,000,000, are hardly matters to be ignored or considered superficially in our land. There are multitudes besides Dr. Abbott who begin to see that to conduct matters in a way to secure the greatest good to the greatest number, which should be the object of government, requires combined effort and action; marshaling society into a more homogenous whole, and in a manner whereby the wisest heads will naturally come to the front to devise and plan for all, and mankind working together to secure the comforts, the happiness, which naturally belong to a high civilization. They begin to feel that we hav had quite enough of the laissez-faire, hap-hazard mode of conducting affairs, which in the matter of property is simply the granting of a license to any one man to acquire the earth, if capable, and command the inhabitants thereof to betake themselvs to Jupiter or the Moon.

I defy all the sages of earth to successfully defend, in logical argument based on justice and humanity, the system of unlimited private property. This being simply impossible, is it then so clear that the system of private property either limited or unlimited is the best that has been or may be devised?

Is it not possible that the system of collectiv property, advocated by some of the French writers, and which John Stuart Mill after studying political economy all his life declared in his last work had "a case for trial," may not after all be the the best for securing the greatest good to the greatest number? These are great questions, and if not new, so long as multitudes of human beings are writhing in their miseries under the present order of things, they should receive the attention of every lover of his race. But how are these subjects of Socialism and Communism treated generally to-day by those having the power to either disseminate or suppress to a great extent their tenets and teachings? I mean the editors and publishers of books, magazines, journals, etc. Why, it is well known that everything favoring these subjects is suppressed, "sat down upon," so far as the generality of editors and publishers hav it in their power to do so.

Moreover, no possible opportunity is neglected for picking up or inventing anything whereby odium may be cast on the Socialist or his cause; and these contemptuous, venomous slurs are bandied from one journal to another throughout our land. But, on the other hand, let a work appear attacking the subjects and, however weak it may be, long and highly laudatory notices of it are quite sure to appear in all our great journals, and every effort is put forth to extend its circulation.

Why this habitual boycotting of all Socialistic writings? It is because they contain unanswerable truths which the powers that be fear to hav come before the people. But progress must necessarily be slow while such intolerance exists.

Besides the "boycotting" of Socialistic utterances which I hav alluded to, the spread of Socialistic principles is no doubt greatly retarded by that insatiate love which human beings ever seem to hav to arrange themselvs on the popular, or what is sometimes called the respectable, side of a question. This unquestionably arises from a lack of moral courage, but nevertheless it is there. I hav been forcibly reminded of this propensity of mankind to range themselvs upon what is thought to be the respectable side of a question from reading an editorial in the New York Times this very morning upon the disestablishment of the English church.

The writer of the article spoken of holds that Mr. Gladstone should hav ranged himself on the side with those "who are attached to the church, not by reasoned conviction, but by sentiment and by habit. It is good form," he goes on to say, "in England to express respect for the church, and there is no country where a fondness for good form, a desire to be conventionally proper, counts for so much as in England. It is extremely bad form to be either an Infidel or a Dissenter, and, from the point of view of the English upper class, there is not much to choose between these two characters. This was very strikingly illustrated in the case of Bradlaugh. Perhaps half the members of the House of Commons held opinions not distinguishable from those of Bradlaugh upon the formality of the oath. Yet the House of Commons voted to commit a gross outrage upon Bradlaugh and upon the electors who had chosen Bradlaugh as their representativ, simply because the House of Commons detested Bradlaugh as a 'cad' for giving public utterance to its own opinions." How much of the very spirit shown in the above extract there is existing, not only in England, but throughout the world!

Men are angry at, and ready to condemn and squelch, those who utter that which in their innermost souls they know to be true, simply because they hav precipitated a matter which they are not ready for yet; nor will they ever be ready for it so long as they can prevent its being brought forward.

According to the writer in the Times, half the members of the House of Commons held opinions upon the formality of the oath not distinguishable from those of Mr. Bradlaugh, and yet these egregious hypocrits were ready to sacrifice their honor to snub one who dared face a question that ought long since to hav been brought forward and settled.

But suppression and obloquy seem to be the inevitable fate, not only of the reformer, but of all great questions brought forward in the interest of reform. As an illustration of this fact, take the question of slavery in our land. Forty years ago how few were to be found who had the moral courage to confess themselvs Abolitionists. To-day, though there is no such question at issue, all are Abolitionists in spirit. Is it because any particular change has taken place in the public mind as to the justice or injustice of slavery? Not a bit of it. Every sensible human being in our country forty years ago knew as well that human slavery was a great and inexcusable wrong, as he does to-day; but the difference is, that forty years ago it was unpopular to be an Abolitionist, while now it is popular. Where Abolitionism stood forty years ago in our land, Socialism and Communism stand to-day. They are questions not to be agitated, but to be ridiculed —suppressed. The system of unlimited private property is as well known to be unjust to-day as slavery was forty years ago; and within forty years this fact will be generally acknowledged.

AUTHOR OF "RATIONAL COMMUNISM."

The Harmony and Meaning of the Scientific Gospels.

A LECTURE BY T. B. WAKEMAN (CONCLUDED).

XII.—FROM THE SCIENTIFIC SOLUTION OF THE WORLD AND OF MAN RELIGION WILL ENTER UPON A NEW PHASE OF TRUTH, COMFORT, AND SATISFACTION TO HUMAN NATURE, AND FROM IT MORALITY, CHIEFLY RESTING UPON HUMANITY, WILL SANCTION AND REGULATE, LARGELY BY UTILITY AND CHARM, THE INDIVIDUAL AND COLLECTIVE EFFORTS OF MANKIND.

The continued use of the word Religion to express the general sum and effect of the new view of the world is a stumbling-block to many. But this use is justified by truth, custom, and convenience. The word Religion in its true and general sense means, as Webster defines it, "Any system of faith and worship; as the religion of the Turks, or Hindoos, or Christians; true and false religion," etc. The word has no necessary connection with the Theistic or Theological worships which are comparatively quite recent, and of which a majority of the people and religions of the world have no knowledge; for instance, the Buddhists and Chinese. Religion in this general meaning of the word may be defined as the sum and synthesis of a man's relations to the world and humanity. To his hands these relations are at first concrete and empirical knowledge; to his head they become the special sciences correlated and integrated into the Positive or Scientific Philosophy; to his heart they appear as the source of his feelings, hopes, and motives. But, taken altogether, they form the true religion and solution of the world and man—a faith according to knowledge. Mr. Spencer has used the word integration, which is admirable in the philosophical point of view, but which cannot cover the concrete or the emotional aspects of the new view of the world, also included in the word religion. The Religion of Science and Humanity, therefore, founded by Auguste Comte upon the Positive or Scientific Philosophy of the world, stands justified in name and substance, as the outcome and flower of all past phases of thought and feeling; nor because its founder made an error in seeking to use it to resurrect the Papacy instead of inaugurating the Republic of Man, is there a reason why all Liberals, Secularists, and Positivists should not turn its face to the future and cordially co-operate to make that Republic a reality.

Many steps must be taken and many changes occur before that ideal can be realized. But the first step must be to get that ideal thoroughly, and as early as possible, implanted in the hearts and minds of the advanced peoples of the world. To this end the philosophy, zeal, and "religiosity" of Comte need only to be considered as directed and applied to the grand Republic, the true ideal, in order to make his life-work of the very highest utility. Those who have approached Comte hitherto seem to have been either prostrated, as before some God, or repelled as by a demon. The time has come to cheerfully use all he has left us, including his example of devotion in the service of the great Humanity whose chief exponent he undoubtedly was. Equally repugnant to this beneficent use of him are the detraction or neglect on the one hand, and the abject prostration on the other, with which his career has been followed.

If he could translate the devotion of Thomas à Kempis's "Imitation of Christ" into Humanity, certainly we ought to be able to translate his papacy into democratic Republicanism and do it usefully too. The devotion which he gave to the impracticable ideal papacy we must give to the real practical Republic. When that is done the heartfelt change of view from the old egoistic, selfish objects of life to the new altruistic sentiments will regenerate the world as if a new sun had risen. Only by this Religion of Humanity in the hearts of men, women, and children can the world be saved. It only can realize the reforms by which the waste, misery, and wretchedness of the world can be relieved. That is only possible under the spirit of devotion which says it is more blessed to give than to receive. There must be a change of heart. No political or legislative machinery, no economic balancing of supply and demand, or of production and distribution, can ever satisfy the selfishness of man; much less can it form the basis of a healthy morality or of a motive that will make life worth living. The Theological Religions have held men quiet under wrong and injustice by means of hopes of a future heaven, which are now seen to be illusory. Liberty must end in the general scramble for personal enjoyments which will subvert order and progress, unless some dominant portion of our race can rise to the new scientific and human solution of the world, and found upon that solution the basis of a new social order realizing the motives which it discloses as true, good, and permanent in the ever-renewed life of our race.

What other hope is there for a better future? The very names of the words Atheism, Agnosticism, Nihilism, Pessimism, Protestantism, or Anarchism disclose in their meaning only a spirit of denial, doubt, negation, or opposition. Their results so far show that nothing permanently good can come from this spirit and tone of negative feeling. Spiritual dynamite cannot be the permanent and healthy food of the human race. It may be in place now for revolutionary purposes, but among the more intelligent it must gradually give way to the Religion of Rome, or to the Religion of Humanity;

To the Papacy or the Republic;
To Jesuitism or Freedom.

Between these the Secularists and Liberals of the world have now the casting vote. The retrograde spirit of Roman Catholicism is plain to all except its devotees. Its very basis is authority—a government from without. It cannot exist except by a meddling priesthood to impose and regulate, to command and to absorb the souls and substance of the people. It is the order of death.

The progressiv, evolutional, growing, healthy order of Science and Humanity is manifested in the lives and influence of the best and most enlightend peoples the world over. The welfare of the race is to be secured only in the increase of this spirit. Its charm will doubtless in time be expressed in appropriate art, symbols, and worship. There is little doubt, too, but that Comte has correctly indicated whence many of these will come, however absurd they may seem at first. Do not fly at the word "worship." It means simply the ascription of worth to things. To know the world and man by the head, to use it by the hand, is not enough; it must and will be appreciated by the heart. That appreciation is worship; to join with others in such appreciation and in artistic expression of it is the social delight and education of the heart which human nature will not and cannot afford to lose, and which has never, in fact, been so glorious in music, painting, and their sister arts, as now. The new view of the world sanctifies and adorns everything upon which its light rests. Its life wells up within, and is the source of a stalwart individualism, ever rejoicing in the charm of sympathy. Let such worship be gladly recognized, even in its rude beginnings and day of small things, as the legitimate expression of feelings which in time will have spontaneously its festivals and celebrations continuing and enlarging with higher meanings those which began in the early ages of Astrolatry. Especially may this be true as to those festivities which, like Easter and Christmas, St. John's Day and the Harvest Home, coincide with, or by the quarters of the moon date from, the equinoxes and solstices of the year.

As to practical morals, they are largely the religion of a people reduced to practice. The solution of the world founds the religion of a people. Religion is philosophy felt and put into practice. Then religion inspires and sanctions a people's morality. Morality is religion applied to daily life. That the morals of the new faith will differ from the old, in being larger and more comprehensive, follows at once from its internal and evolutional character. The spirit of life will take the place of the dead or formal letter of authority.

As the sailor is safer with the compass than his predecessors were with all his coast-lines, or even all the stars, so now the needle in the heart will always point with admonishing and unerring accuracy to Humanity as the great center of all human feelings, thought, and activity, individual and collective. How this new direction given to all sublunary affairs will harmonize them has been already indicated as to economic and social changes. The process of differentiation will certainly work out and establish the individual man and woman with the right or privilege of the ballot as the unit of society. Consequent changes in politics, in the rights of property, in the family, and in social customs, will doubtless ensue. But let no one fear that Science, which is but another name for order, and Humanity, which is but another name for the good, will lead to changes which, however they may at first appear, will be other than beneficent in the end.

It may well be that, as every religion has had something of good in it which still remains in sentiment, at least, in the human heart, so each stage of social and moral evolution may present some modes of life which should be recognized relatively and temporarily, at least, as beneficent or tolerable. The "charity for all and malice toward none," which evolution thus brings into play, may well be one of the best correctors for the old oppressive ostracism and dogmatism which can only denounce and crush. Thus every phase of the past in the lower races, and even stages of morals and culture, may be moralized, sanctioned, and protected relatively, and made to aid the general welfare. To "live for others" will be found to be the only life "in the whole, the true, and the good" which shall be possible under the inspiration and enthusiasm of Humanity, based upon Science. Such a life will gladly recognize, save, and use every stage of progress, and every phase of morals or individuality, as parts of the "unity in multiplicity" necessary to insure the grand progress leading into the better world. The higher integration must ever include a wider differentiation as parts of its ever higher unity.

So to live is heaven;
To make undying music in the world,
Breathing the beauteous order that controls
With growing sway the growing life of man.

Merry Christmas.

An Acrostic from the Freethinker.

Mirth-moving Christmas! Happy, festiv day!
Enriched the rich are with its bounties gay;
Remorseless Christmas wind o'er town and moor
Redoubles all the mis'ries of the poor.
Yes, Christmas is a merry, sorry day!

Cold blows the wind; keen nips the biting air;
Housed children hope, and homeless ones despair;
Round ruddy fires fair faces gayly glow;
In slush and sleet want wanders with its woe;
Sighs blend with song; shrieks drown the festiv cheer;
Ten hundreds feast; ten thousands fast and fear;
Men sing in cushioned pews; men sob on clay.
All nature in derision seems to say,
Sure Christmas is a merry, sorry day!

—G. L. Mackenzie.

Mr. Mallonee to Mrs. Colman.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav read with interest the various opinions expressed pro and con upon the Palmer-Heywood affair at Albany. Also I notice in THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 12th that Mrs. Colman has given her opinion of the true Liberal—a man who will advocate Freelove and woman suffrage. Now if there be any meaning in words, according to Mrs. Colman, a man who does not advocate such doctrins is not a true reformer. We do not dispute the statement that Mrs. Colman has seen women doing just as hard work as carrying a musket. And yet it is just such work that proves my position to be the only tenable one, for this reason, that woman was out of her sphere in that place. I am ready to build up the moral and legal bulwarks of her right to be protected from such work.

I am astonished that a woman of Mrs. Colman's years and experience should so presume upon the ignorance or stupidity of the reading public as she does by the reference to the man-made law which allows a brutal husband to tyrannize over the wife. There is not a state in which the laws are not in favor of the wife, and let me remark right here that any man or women who needs law in the family, that is, "man-made" laws, had better draw out of the contest; they are not Liberals, they never will be, and the sooner they join a church the better for the cause of Liberals.

A woman without a dime marries a man worth a million; immediately he becomes responsible for all her debts. He is compelled to support her "to the best of his ability," and when he dies she is his heir for life. There is not a law upon the statute book but which is interpreted in favor of woman. And again, it is always asserted that if woman had the ballot she would, by some unexplained means, obtain the same pay as does a man for the same work. What fallacy! Price depends always upon supply and demand, and you can no more fix such matters by law than you can compel people to be happy.

I am sorry that anybody has been twice a widow, but cannot for the life of me see how that applies to this case. Neither can I see how Freelove or woman suffrage is going to lower the price of coal, or increase any woman's ability to earn money except by the violation of a law higher than those "man made."

If more of the girls of America were taught that a true wife, a true mother, were the highest types of womanhood, there would be fewer unmarried women seeking employment. On the contrary, they are taught a lot of twaddle about "slaves to man," "woman's wrongs," and other nonsense which, once imbibed, totally unfits her for the duties of life. I hav no sympathy for any person or class who seek to destroy the sacred institutions of marriage and home.

Cleveland, O. J. D. MALLONEE.

It is time those who deny the efficacy of prayer were suppressed, and here is a fact that does it. A New York minister who owned a pair of horses had one of them stolen. He thereupon prayed that the thief's conscience might be so quickened that he would return. His prayer was answered. The next night the thief returned—and stole the other horse.

An Extraordinary Book.—III.

ARE MOST OF THE LATIN AND GREEK CLASSICS, TOGETHER WITH ALL THE WRITINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS, FORGERIES OF THE FOURTEENTH, FIFTEENTH, AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES?

The forgers hoped that if their frauds were not detected in the course of thirty years, they would not lack abettors, some, like themselvs, Atheists and comrades in impiety, others good but simple-minded men, who were unable to detect such frauds.

Sometimes there were more than one fabricator of the same work, the last one taking it up after the death of the former by imitating his style and argument. Thus there were two, three, or more writers of the same work in one age.

The amount of work done was not, however, so very great. The writings of all the Greek and Latin fathers do not exceed in quantity what Luther and Calvin and their associates produced in fifty years. The works of Augustine do not exceed those of Alphonso Tostado or Albert le Grande. There were, in the sixteenth century, many learned men in Italy, and if those had united in a common purpose, how many works they could hav produced in Greek and Latin, in prose and poetry, far superior to those of Augustine, or Ambrose, or any of the rest, for in recent times we hav had writers who could vie with Cicero and Virgil.

Clement of Alexandria, Eusebius of Cesarea, Theodoretus of Syria, and Justin of Rome all had the same library, for they praise the same authors and repeat the same fables. So also with the rest.

Their style of writing is similar, indicating one age. At first they wrote apologies, epistles, treatises against heretics, and homilies; afterwards, commentaries and studies of the earlier fathers; and, lastly, theological summaries and commentaries on summaries. The author's name was sometimes wanting, being purposely suppressed, so that in a later age the work could be ascribed to some great name.*

To me it is apparent that before about the year 1300 the Greeks had none but Latin Bibles and Liturgies, just as there are none other now in India and America—no, not even a Greek Psalter. And they hav not yet a printed edition of the Greek Old Testament, nor did they hav a Greek New Testament before the year 1638.

The error concerning the procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father alone had its origin with these impious forgers. Nothing is more certain. Therefore the Greek schism began about the year 1300.

It was necessary for these forgers to fabricate with great study, labor, and perseverance, a history of Byzantium, and to continue it up to the time of Leo X. (1513), so as to cover the period of all councils, heresies, and patriarchates. Hence there are many more manuscript codices in our Royal and Colbertine Libraries than in all the East. And hence in these Greek manuscripts are found many Gallicisms.

From about the year 1350 to 1480 this system of forgery flourished. Pliny (the elder) in his work praises many authors whose works unfortunately are now lost. Antiquity neglected them; it has preserved only Plautus, Pliny, Virgil (nine Eclogues and the Georgics), Horace (the Satires and Epistles), Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, and nine books of Herodotus. It has also allowed many of its most important monuments to be destroyed. Why, therefore, should it hav guarded a multitude of works which the learned justly despise, on account of their poverty of reasoning, mediocrity of style, and many other faults, unless these same learned men, in order to preserve those mediocre works, took care to deposit them in libraries, not of private men, who in those times had no libraries, but of monks, whence they could be taken out only with great difficulty?

Before the invention of printing all the monastic libraries (and there were none others before about 1370) were nothing but so many magazines of Atheism and heresy, which for the three hundred years past (1429 to 1729) hav sorely vexed and torn the church. When these forged books began to be brought to light, about the middle of the fourteenth century, they were eagerly accepted without examination. Of the more important, or such as the impious gang of forgers wished to be most used, they took care to make many copies, which they sold at a great price. They boasted of their skill in writing and their industry in illuminating, for from the nature of their institution that kind of work was suited to their hands.

All the codices were manuscripts at that time, and were as unknown as those that are not yet taken out of the depositories. Nor were they at once published when written, as is now usual with printed books, but they were laid aside and not taken out until years afterward.

A great many codices lie hidden in the libraries that hav not yet seen the light. Some of them may be almost four hundred years old; there are no older manuscripts except the sacred scriptures. But because these codices hav lain hidden so long, and no one in all that time has proved them to be false, should they therefore be regarded as authority? How absurd!

In Gaul there are many Latin manuscripts; in Italy but few. On the other hand, there are many Greek manuscripts in Italy. But they are of recent date and apparent translations from the Latin. Hence I suspect that most of the Greek books were first written in Latin, and were then sent to Italy—to Venice, or Milan, or Rome, or Naples—where they were translated into Greek. Then a few went to Constantinople, but most returned to Gaul, from whence a few of the Latin works were transmitted to Italy.

Charles V., surnamed the Wise (1364–1380). founded the Royal library, consisting of about nine hundred volumes. That was the largest library of the time. Pope Nicholas V. (1447–1455) collected Greek books, and translated them into Latin. But in 1304 Simon, bishop of Paris, had no other volumes which he could bequeath to his church than books of the chapel for the use of the church. And in 1279 bishop Stephen gave to his church in Paris the following list of books: 2 Missalia; Evangelium et Epistolas, in 2 volumes; 3 Gradualia; Ordinarium Episcopale; 1 Collectarium; 1 Troperium; 3 Breviarium (large and small); 1 Bibliam postillatam, in 2 volumes. Those were all; no Augustine, no Jerome, no Chrysostom, no Gregory, no master-mind, no great name, no fictitious religious writer.

After the capture of Constantinople by Mohammed II. there were only about fifty manuscript codices in that Patriarchate, and in the whole city only about one hundred and eighty—and what has become of them nobody knows.

In all Greece this side of Byzantium, except perhaps Mount Athos, where we do not know how many books exist, you can scarcely make out, from Montfaucon's description, more than one hundred Greek MSS. Of the rest of the East we know nothing; but in the West, i.e., Italy, Gaul, England, Germany, and Batavia, there are some twenty thousand. Why so many more than in the East? Because they were all fabricated in the West.

The gang of forgers had alphabets of all ages in every language, especially Greek and Latin; also ink and parchment of all ages; and in some instances the fraud is made apparent by the striking similarity of the letters to those of old New Testament codices, showing a plain imitation, as if done by the same hand.

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

*As an instance of anonymous forgery, when, in 1468, the "Annals of Tacitus" was first published, there was likewise appended to it "A Dialogue Concerning Oratory," which, though anonymous, was assigned to Cornelius Tacitus. It purported to be written in the sixth year of Vespasian, A.D. 75. In 1574 Lipsius published the first good edition of the works of Tacitus, including the "Dialogue," which he pronounced in point of style, beauty of invention, and sound judgment, equal to the best models of antiquity. But he could see nothing of the peculiar style of Tacitus in it, and was unable to determin who wrote it. Other scholars could not agree whether it belonged to Tacitus, Pliny the Younger, Suetonius, Quintilian, or some unknown author. But Brotier (1723–1789), one of the best of all the editors of Tacitus, was unwilling to rob him of the authorship of such a beautiful and judicious essay, especially since it was ascribed to Tacitus in the first edition ever published. The truth is, it cannot be ascribed to any ancient author. It was probably forged by Poggio Bracciolini, who also wrote the "Annals" of Tacitus in 1429.

The Liberal Club.

When the man with the badge-pin reached the door of Masonic Hall, to attend the 393d regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, he perceived an unusually bright light shining over Stuyvesant Park, a short distance away. It looked as if it might be opening night for some hostelry in the neighborhood, and the observer started off to investigate. The illumination was found to proceed from an electric light suspended in front of St. George's Episcopal church on Rutherford Place. A revival is in progress there, and an occasional person was strolling in. The women, as usual, carried the prayer books. The observer did not go in. He had attended St. George's church once, and had seen the "worshipers" go down on their knees and mumble the lip service. It reminded him of a morgue. So he went back to the Liberal Club.

In spite of the rainy weather, people enough were present to fill the hall. President Wakeman was reading the program of exercises for Christmas eve. We were to hav a speech, recitations, singing, and other musical proceedings, to close with a benediction. Then Mr. Wakeman said that he had great pleasure, and esteemed it an honor, to introduce to this audience Mr. VanBuren Denslow, formerly of Chicago, but now fortunately of New York, who would deliver the lecture of the evening.

Mr. Denslow received this introductory blandishment gracefully, and went ahead unfluttered. He said there was a good deal of delusion about the social problem. Some people seemed to think that inequality among men was the result of injustice, when the fact was that rich and poor both owe their position to the flow of natural law. There are numerous aristocracies. First was the aristocracy of muscle, and here the lecturer drew a fine word-picture of a stalwart glass-blower, and contrasted him with A. T. Stewart, a pauper in health, who starved to death because his stomach could digest nothing. Then there was the aristocracy of learning, ignorance being intellectual poverty; the aristocracy of health, some children being born with vitality enough to last only a few years. What a sarcasm was this upon the statement that all men are created equal! Mr. Denslow proceeded to point out other inexpugnable inequalities, and argued from them that poverty was necessary to human happiness, and that without want there would be no work, as no one would exert himself unless it was necessary. A Socialistic distribution of wealth was therefore absurd. The speaker said that labor reformers were inconsistent. In the name of liberty they joined societies or orders that restricted their liberties more than did the most despotic governments. Mr. Denslow is a brilliant casuist, and might hav a deleterious influence on an audience unacquainted with sophistry.

At the end of the lecture Mr. Wakeman announced that Burnham Wardell, the prison reformer, was sick and in destitute circumstances in this city. Mr. Wakeman thought that a slight Socialistic distribution of wealth in that direction would be appropriate. A collection of $15 was thereupon taken up for Mr. Wardwell, and then Mr. Blissert introduced Mr. Hinton to the club, and said he was an orator who could probably make the temperature of that hall equatorial for Mr. Denslow. The chair invited Mr. Hinton to the platform. Mr. Hinton said ten minutes was a short time in which to combat the philosophy of despair and the religion of diabolism. He was fearful of dynamite. Mr. Hinton said that he was not a dynamiter; he believed in evolution, at which the lecturer had so elaborately sneered. Applause at some of his remarks had an encouraging effect on this speaker, and he shouted and flung his arms about to such an extent that the chair felt called upon to rebuke him for his superfluous activity.

Mr. Blissert followed. He was glad to hear this lecture. He hoped it would be delivered all over the country to arouse the dormant activity of those who believe in human rights. It was the devil's own doctrin.

Dr. Kinget had heard the same kind of lectures twenty-five years ago. It was the old story of the priest back of the oppressor, telling the people to be content with the position in which the Lord had placed them. Dr. Kinget announced it as his firm conviction that Mr. Denslow did not understand the a b c of the labor problem.

Mr. Palmer was called for, and after some urging, and amid a great deal of applause, he took the platform and spoke briefly. He said:

I am glad to hav listened to-night to the most brilliant exposition I hav ever heard of the theory of capitalistic inequality. I think Mr. Denslow is right in saying that aristocracy always has existed and always will. But the fault that I hav to find is, that he has left out the most important aristocratic factors of all—those that I mentioned in my paper last week: I mean the aristocracy of justice and the aristocracy of religion. I should call this lecture the apotheosis of inhumanity. It is the doctrin of each for himself and the devil take the hindmost, and the world he describes is the world I don't want to liv in. It is a world that is utterly opposed in all its spirit to the whole course of evolution of the human race. It is the attempt to deify selfishness. I believe in the religion of fair play—in the religion of being good and being kind. There is absolutely no kindness in his theory. As far as the history of religion goes, the religious idea is based upon this, that each should be for all and all for each. Monotheism has been the basis of brotherhood, and as the anthropomorphic God is fading away into thin air, we find the religious spirit spending itself upon humanity. In other words, humanity becomes the be-all and end-all of life. And when this enthusiasm becomes the enthusiasm of us all, then will be inaugurated the industrial and social commonwealth.

Mr. Wakeman here accepted a pressing invitation from the audience, and said a few words. He disagreed altogether with the lecturer of the evening. Mr. Denslow had represented the human race as an army with wolves in the rear to devour the stragglers. He had left out the factors of the human will and conscience. This was the last chapter of the law of evolution. Herbert Spencer had made the same omission, but it was the glory of Auguste Comte that he had included it in his philosophy. Humanity should be made one great life insurance company.

When Mr. Denslow came to close up things, he said that the Liberal Club still retained many superstitions. Among these was the doctrin of Altruism as opposed to Egoism. It was a great mistake to be kind or to relieve the distressed. Charity and helpfulness were relics of barbarism, and were found as pronounced among the invertebrata as in the human family. If the young man of the New Testament had followed the advice of Christ, sold all he had, and given to the poor, the just remark would be, "A fool and his money are soon parted." Mr. Denslow hoped to present his views further at some future time. There were few present who could go far with the lecturer, and a general dissent was expressed.

Mr. Shook was not present. Neither was Dr. Eccles nor Mr. Cohen, nor Mr. Huhn, nor Professor Vaughan, of Virginia. The echo of their voices has died out of the German Masonic Hall, and there is nothing to explain why this is thus. The admission is only five cents. Ladies and Presbyterians are encouraged to come free of charge. Ministers will be paid to attend.

CATALOG of our books free on application.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents.

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.

E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

News and Notes.

The following from the New York Times of Dec. 18th and 19th shows the progress of the effort for the opening of the museums on Sunday:

S. P. Putnam, who has charge of the circulation of the petitions asking for the opening of the museums in Central Park on Sundays, wrote yesterday to the directors of the American Museum of Natural History, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the following letter:

To Morris K. Jessup, John Taylor Johnson, and others,

GENTLEMEN: I inclose you a petition for the opening of the museums on Sunday. To this petition I hav received several thousand signatures from the officers of the city, judges of the courts, prominent business men and citizens, and large numbers of the working people, and also resolutions in its favor from almost all of the labor organizations of the city. These signatures of our best citizens represent a great part of the community. There is but little opposition, and it is only a question of time as to lengthening indefinitly the list of signers. But we hav preferred to obtain an expression of opinion from men who of themselvs adequately represent public sentiment rather than to multiply names. Their desire thus expressed is worthy of a most careful consideration on the part of the directors of the museums. I should like an opportunity to present this petition, and to state the reasons there are for the opening on Sunday of the institutions under your care. I also desire to hear from you or others the objections there may be to Sunday opening. The demand for this is based upon justice and public policy, and should be met with the utmost respect, and all reasons for or against be fairly and openly stated, so that a thorough understanding can be arrived at. A question of such importance should be wisely discussed and decided in order that the public may be satisfied as to the course ultimately adopted.

Will you please arrange for a meeting of the board of directors in a few days, so that I can present this petition, and the reasons why it should be granted? All the petitions circulated hav not yet been returned. I presume, however, that some day next week, or the week after, will do for the meeting. I should like to hav the matter decided before Jan. 1st, in order that during the coming winter the people may enjoy the benefit of a trial in favor of the petition. I hope that you will respond cordially to this request for a conference. Surely only the right can prevail where there is a free, open, and thorough discussion among reasonable men. Yours truly,

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Secretary of American Secular Union.

In answer to his letter to the trustees of the American Museum of National History and of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, inclosing petitions of many citizens who desire those institutions opened on Sunday, Mr. S. P. Putnam received the following yesterday:

I.

AMERICAN MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY,
NEW YORK, Dec. 17, 1885.

Samuel P. Putnam, Esq., Secretary of the American Secular Union:

DEAR SIR: I hav received your letter of yesterday inclosing a petition praying for the opening of the museum on Sunday. You ask for an opportunity to present the petition in person and to hear whatever objection there may be to granting it.

Some of the chief objections, or rather difficulties, in the way of opening the museums on Sunday were stated by me in an address before the Board of Estimates and Apportionment on October 30th last. This address I shall soon hav printed, when I will send you a copy.

As to your appearing before the trustees to present the petition in person, I can only say that the board does not meet until the second Monday of February next, when I will lay your letter before them and communicate to you their pleasure in the matter. Yours truly,

MORRIS K. JESUP, President.

II.

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART,
NEW YORK, Dec. 17, 1885.

Samuel P. Putnam Esq., Secretary of the American Secular Union:

SIR: I hav to acknowledge receipt of your communication, under date of the 16th inst., which will be laid before the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art at their first meeting. I am yours respectfully,

JOHN GAYLOR JOHNSTON, President.

We shall await with great interest the objections and the difficulties in the way of this demand for justice, and shall be prepared to fully meet them. A fair and square discussion of the question must in the end open these museums to the people.

The American Museum of Natural History yesterday asked the board of estimate and apportionment for an appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of an addition to the museum building, which addition should contain a lecture hall for the use of teachers in public schools, as well as accommodations for the display of the museum collections that are now stored away. President Morris K. Jesup, of the museum trustees; School Superintendent Jasper, Park Commissioner Beekman, and others urged the granting of the appropriation, one-half of which is asked this year and the remainder next year. Mayor Grace gave assurance that the matter would receive careful consideration.—Herald.

There is no doubt the museum will receive the above amount for its improvement provided all the people who, by their taxes, contribute to the payment shall hav the benefit of the enlarged facilities. But if it is simply for the use of only a few on week days, and the expenditure of this vast sum is shut off from the people on Sundays, when it can do the most good, then we affirm it is an injustice, under the circumstances, to grant the money desired. The museums will hav every facility given them for public improvements, if, first of all, its directors will make the institution thoroughly democratic and humanitarian in its conduct, and its instrumentality be used for the welfare of the whole people, and not merely for a select few.

The museums hav also received a bequest from Mr. Vanderbilt. What do they propose to do with it? The New York Times suggests as follows:

Mr. Vanderbilt's bequest of $100,000 to the Metropolitan Museum of Art is likely to reawaken interest in the proposition to keep that institution open on Sundays. Some time ago, when the trustees of the museum were petitioned to allow the public free access to the museum on Sundays, one of the arguments used against the petition was that there was no money in the hands of the trustees to defray the extra expense. Now that the coffers of the museum are about to be filled, through Mr. Vanderbilt's generosity, some of the petitioners are hoping that their request will be considered more favorably.

"The trustees of the Metropolitan Museum hav no official knowledge that Mr. Vanderbilt has left the institution $100,000," said a member of the board yesterday, "and until the museum receives the money it would hardly be becoming for us to discuss what use shall be made of it. Personally I am in favor of investing the money as advantageously as possible, and devoting the interest to the purchase of works of art. Certainly, we ought to hav the means of adding to our collection from year to year. The experiment of keeping the museum open Sundays might be tried in this way: Suppose a number of well-to-do citizens who favor the project send a petition to the trustees, accompanied by the tender of a sufficient amount of money to defray the extra cost of keeping the institution open on Sundays, for a stated period, say through the winter. That would leave the trustees practically no ground on which to refuse the request."

"That suggestion is a very good one," commented another one of the trustees, "for, should the experiment of keeping the museum open on Sundays be a success, the trustees would be obliged to continue the practice, and no doubt the force of public opinion would open some way to their obtaining the necessary funds."

"How much does the city pay toward defraying the expenses of the museum?" was asked.

"It costs about $33,000 a year to run the museum and keep it in repair, and the city pays about $12,000 of that amount," replied the trustee.

This is further emphasized by an editorial in the same paper:

Mr. Vanderbilt's bequests to the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art will make the maintenance of those institutions considerably easier than it has heretofore been. It is not to be supposed that the efforts of the public-spirited citizens to whom we owe the museums will be relaxed, nor their own gifts diminished, by these bequests. They will simply find themselvs at liberty to do more than they hav done heretofore, and to carry out plans they hav no doubt already formed.

Scarcely anybody who does not object, on religious grounds, to the opening of any place of secular instruction or entertainment on Sunday will dispute that the most important extension that can be made of the usefulness of these collections is to open them to the public on Sunday. In fact, it is only on Sunday that they can be opened to the majority of the dwellers on this island, who hav their bread to earn on the other six days of the week. The experiment of giving to Central Park on Sunday the additional attraction of a concert was so successful that he would be a bold person who should now counsel the Park commissioners to abandon it. But excellent as that movement was, it was scarcely so much needed as the opening of the museums on Sunday.

In summer all but the very poor can go out of town on their day of rest, and they take advantage of this opportunity in great numbers. In winter there is no place for them to go unless they go to church, and church-going does not take up the whole of anybody's Sunday. Those who do not go to church hav the choice of staying at home or of betaking themselvs to the nearest groggery. Considering what "at home" means to the dwellers in New York tenement houses, it is hard to blame them for breaking the excise law. In the saloons there is at least something going on, and to an educated man or woman, who can find entertainment in a book or in thought, it is hard to conceive the dreariness of a day within doors and nothing to do to an uneducated person. The absence of any wholesome interest begets the craving for the unwholesome stimulation to which the saloons minister. The most useful function of public institutions like the two museums in question is the substitution of an innocent and improving for a vicious and debasing form of entertainment.

Some moralist has maintained of mankind in general that it knows not how to be idle and innocent. Whether the proposition is universally true or not, it is certainly true of a very large proportion ef the population of modern cities, including New York. A wise philanthropist, seeing that several hundreds of thousands of people who did not know how to be idle and innocent were left to their own devices on one day of every week, and reflecting upon the amount of mischief which Satan finds for idle hands to do, would endeavor, one would imagin, to provide some innocent occupation for the idle day. All the efforts of all the Protestant churches to attract the people who most need this occupation meet with only a very moderate degree of success. The most obvious expedient is to try the effect of those Secular institutions for instruction and entertainment which are admitted by everybody to be innocent and improving on six days of the week, and the benefits of which two-thirds or more of the population hav no chance of getting except on the seventh.

It is hard to see any justification for refusing to try this experiment with these two museums except that of lack of funds, and this the Vanderbilt bequests may remove by enabling the trustees to use for this purpose money heretofore needed for other purposes. But, as one of the trustees suggests in our news columns, there should be no trouble on this score if the people who believe in the Sunday opening will guarantee the cost of tryiug the experiment. A fair trial, it is to be noted, cannot be a short trial. The Sunday opening, which may easily be arranged so as not to conflict with the hours of church service, should be kept up until it is certain that the people whom it is intended to benefit are made aware of it. If that condition is fulfilled we hav little doubt that it will appear that the public usefulness of the museums is greater on Sundays than on all other days of the week together.

These extracts from the New York press show the almost universal demand there is for the opening of the museums. The effort in this direction will not be abandoned. Again we say to the objectors, state your objections fairly and let us see if they cannot be removed. The real reason, after all, in the minds of those that oppose the Sunday opening, is a Sabbatarian one. Will they dare to state this reason and thus make the issue plain between a Sunday for the people and a Sunday for the pulpits only? This is a most important question, and the sooner the issue is made the better. It will be met, and the result is not uncertain. The principles which the Americrn Secular Union is organized to defend will prevail in this American republic. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Canadian Notes.

CHARLES WATTS IN THE OPERA HOUSE.

In the morning at 11 o'clock Mr. Watts lectured on "Secular Societies, their Mission and Triumphs." In the evening, at 7 o'clock, the lecturer eloquently discoursed on "The American Secular Union," under the presidency and genial influence of Colonel Ingersoll. The Toronto Secular Society, and the various Secular organizations throughout the whole of the Dominion of Canada, are in affiliation with the American Secular Union. Hearty and prolonged applause greeted the appearance of the lecturer upon the platform, and at the closing peroration Mr. Watts received an ovation. On Wednesday he will lecture on the "English Elections and the Irish Question." Charles Watts is a prime favorit with all classes of the community; his pure English pronunciation and accent, his clear and distinct enunciation, delight the ears of the "English, you know." It is a pleasure to listen to the simplicity of his language, interspersed with sonorous sentences of Johnsonian impressivness and power.

The Toronto Secular Society hav taken a lease of a most elegant hall, close to the post-office, in Millichamp's block, with a seating capacity of about six hundred, which renders the Toronto Secular Society independent of owners of lecture rooms, as our own hall will accommodate Charles Watts, and other professional Secular lecturers, when visiting Toronto.

Mr. Arthur Tilney has received the appointment from the Toronto Secular Society to the position of their city missionary, and from the zeal and energy he displays in the dissemination of Freethought literature, he is eminently qualified for the office.

Toronto, Dec. 14, 1885. R. B. BUTLAND.

Mr. Reynolds at Jobstown, N. J.

Thanks to the energy of that stanch advocate of the Nine Demands, Mr. S. R. Wetherill, and the generous liberality of Mr. John W. Black, who is ever ready to aid and help the cause of Liberalism, we had the pleasure of delivering on Sunday afternoon and evening, Dec. 20th, the first Liberal lectures ever delivered in this town. The meetings were held at Wetherill's Hall. In the afternoon the hall was filled. In the evening it became necessary to crowd in additional seats, and even standing-room was at a premium.

At the afternoon meeting we spoke on "The Sabbath," and it was evident that the conviction settled upon the Christians present that they had all their lives been deceived in regard to the teaching of the Bible on this subject. Several so expressed themselvs. Thus they were prepared to listen with less of prejudice in the evening, when we refuted the charge that Liberals were ignorant of the Bible, and knew nothing of the character of God as it was revealed in his holy word.

At the close of the evening meeting we organized the Jobstown Secular Union, with the following officers: President, John W. Black; vice-president, J. S. Bolton; secretary, Sam. R. Wetherill; treasurer, T. F. Wright; vigilance committee, James Kelly, J. S. Bolton, and C. P. Horner; educational committee, J. S. Bolton, J. W. Black, and S. R. Wetherill; social committee, James Kelly, C. P. Horner, and T. F. Wright.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Sunday, Dec. 13th.—Notwithstanding the deluge—for it rained all day as though the mythical promis had broken, or the bow in the heavens had got out of order—we were alike surprised and delighted to find nearly two hundred persons assembled at Industrial Hall, the new headquarters of Friendship Liberal League No. 257, on Sunday afternoon, and there was an overwhelming verdict of acquittal after we had delivered our "Defense of the Devil." The presence of the indefatigable business manager of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Mr. Chas. P. Somerby, added interest to the occasion. All seemed much gratified to meet the able and courteous representativ of the model Liberal paper of the world.

In the evening, the lull in the descending torrents resulted in full attendance. We spoke on the right, justice, and need of the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

Friendship Liberal League No. 257 has very happily succeeded in weeding out an orthodox and otherwise discordant and objectionable element, and now givs evidence of healthy, rapid, and vigorous growth.

Perfect harmony prevails, and a spirit of emulation as to who can most advance the cause of Liberalism in general and the interests of Friendship Liberal League No. 257 in particular.

C. B. REYNOLDS.

Communications.

The Integral Investigators.

Among the many societies, institutes, lyceums, and clubs which hav come forward to grapple with the questions included under the general term "social," perhaps the one that has undertaken the most difficult task is the Council of Radical Investigators.

There can be no doubt that something is wrong in society. Certainly it is not a just state of affairs when deserving people are poor and destitute, while unworthy people fare well. Civilization has not reached its ultimate when those who produce nothing practically own everything, and those who earn all the wealth of the world enjoy none of it. If there was not enough of everything necessary raised and manufactured on this planet to satisfy the natural wants of all mankind and womankind, the condition of affairs might be viewed more calmly if less hopefully; but while the world is rich enough to giv everybody comfort, those who do not enjoy that comfort are not forever going to be cheated out of it without a protest. That would be altogether unreasonable and unjust.

The social problem is therefore up for discussion, and the question, What should be done? is leading to great divergency of opinion. And so sects hav sprung up, as in the church, each thinking itself right and endeavoring to convince the world that it has struck upon both the difficulty and the remedy. These sects are as widely opposed in their methods as it is possible for one method to differ from another, and, employed chiefly in defending themselvs, they appear to make little progress toward any practical measures. There seems to be, therefore, a necessity for some body of leaders interested in these social topics who instead of antagonizing each other should come together to consult and find out, if possible, how far reconciliation is practicable among them. The belief is entertained that, so soon as representativ minds can organize themselvs on some common intellectual basis, reform will take on a new character, manifest its real strength in the world, and fulfil its high calling, instead of frittering away its resources upon needless and unprofitable discussions about secondary and subordinate issues. This is what the Council of Integral Investigators endeavors to be and to do. It is hardly necessary to say that the central figure in this council is Stephen Pearl Andrews. The word Integral means whole or all-sided. Mr. Andrews claims that the reconciliation sought for is furnished by the discoveries and researches which he has made. Others who also recognize the urgent necessity of this reconciliation hav joined him to help find out how it can be effected and how reform can be made a fact in the world as in the church, the state, and other organized enterprises, or whether it must forever remain a mere body of broken fragments.

There are two schools of radical social reformers who seem to desire to get at the bottom of the difficulty and commence there. These are the so-called Anarchists and the so-called Communists—that is to say, Individualists and Collectivists—the former believing in no government, the latter in all government. The Individualists would leave everything to individual enterprise; the Collectivists would hav the government take charge of all matters of general interest. Between these two schools there seems to be about as much distance as there is between the east and the west.

Such is a bare outline of the condition of things at present, of the work which these radical investigators hav before them, and of the material with which they hav to deal.

One meeting of the council has been held at this writing. The members gathered at the study of Mr. Andrews, who has been for some time in ill health, and who, feeble of body but with mental powers undiminished, presided from his invalid chair. There were present about a dozen persons. As a text for discussion, Mr. F. F. Cook, on behalf of the Individualists, presented the following "Postulates on Social Organization:"

1. Society is founded on the individual, and society is no more than a congeries of individual expressions.
2. All expressions, to hav any value, must be outworkings along individual lines, or they are a positiv handicap upon individual and, therefore, upon organic growth.
3. Society is based on moral ideas, and any society is good or bad as these ideals are realized in individual action, independent of legislativ attempts to make them conform to the ideal.
4. All compulsions are hindrances to development, whether set on foot in the name of religion, purity, Liberalism, God, devil, humanity or freedom. In fact, the purer the motiv behind the compulsion, the greater the hindrance to progress, the greater the crime.

This statement is eminently Anarchistic, and would probably be unqualifiedly subscribed to by Mr. Tucker, Mr. Heywood, Mr. Seward Mitchell, and many others. It means the largest personal liberty, including freedom in thought, speech, press, mails, and love. It is anti-prohibition and anti-church, and leaves the state very little to do.

As opposed to Mr. Cook's "postulates," Mr. Wakeman, who is more of a Collectivist, presented his side of the question. He assented to the statement of Mr. Cook, "that society is founded on the individual," but he demurred to the statement "that society is no more than a congeries of individual expressions;" he also demurred to the statement "that society is based on moral ideas." Society, he said, is also founded on the necessities by which human nature is dominated and the law of evolution of human progress, out of which moral ideas arise, and that these ideas are brought to bear through education and moral persuasion, but not through the compulsion of even the best and wisest.

The practical work which Mr. Wakeman proposes will be found well laid out in his series of articles at present publishing in THE TRUTH SEEKER. His methods are but little less radical than those of the Capitalist who has written the book "Rational Communism."

With the Individualists and Collectivists so widely at variance, Universology intervenes and holds out the olive branch to both. Mr. Andrews said:

The following are the universological comments to be made upon Mr. Cook's first proposition; or rather two propositions in one paragraph:

The Individual is the Unit of the Radical and Democratic constitution of society; and so most fundamental; in which sense society may be justly said to be founded on the individual.

Stopping here, this is Anarchism, pure and simple.

But the family, or the least aggregation of individuals in society, is the consociable unit (as the foot-rule is the unit of measure, and the pound of weight) of all social aggregation, and so of society itself. In this there is Rank, Hierarchy, Subordination, and Governmental Intervention, and thence Order, and the Aristocratic type, as contrasted with the Democratic type, of social organization.

In fine, Pantarchism is the reconciliativ harmony and mutual scientific adjustment of these two types in a third and higher type of social development than either. The steps of this reconciliation are these:

1. The recognition of the fact in the nature of things, that freedom and order are co-ordinate and ever-present principles of all existence; and that they are harmonized in the higher productions of Nature.

2. Of the fact that Individuality (Anarchism) and Archism are the recurrence, in society, of these two universal principles of freedom and order—archism being some sort of Governmental interference.

3. Of the fact that Archism or Governmental interference laps back from the Sociability to and upon the Individual; in which form it is self-Government; but that it is archism or government still, in the constraint which it puts upon the otherwise unconstrained or unlimited freedom of the Individual; and that in proportion as self-government along right lines of development intervenes, foreign governmental interference (Heterarchism) retires or subsides, as no longer necessary, but that, in the mean time, which is practically forever, in varying degree, Heterarchy (government by the intrusion of others), is a necessary evil, which, in the whole aggregate of human affairs, assumes large proportions, and will insist on being practically attended to.

4. That society as practically existent is always, and will always be, something more than a congeries of mere individual expressions. It is that congeries plus the new and foreign element of Order, which is imported not from the separate individual, but from the right social adjustment of diverse individuals; and is Mathematical and Ideal, rather than Entical and Real; in other words scientic, as contrasted with the mere Natural. It is the expression not of the Individuals as such, but of the aggregate of all Individuals and their inherent relationships, or the universality as contrasted with the individuality of integral existence, and as a distinct and counterparting idea.

5. That there are grades of foreign governmental interferences, from pure unmitigated compulsion up to the existence and influence of mere social charm, which last, pantarchally organized, so coincides with the exercise of right self-government that reconciliation and harmony ensue; and the two principles, Freedom and Order, then appear as one, while nevertheless, in abstract theory, they always remain two.

6. An Army is thus something more than the individual soldiers of which it is composed, whether taken distributivly or collectivly. Collectivly, they are a mob, and not an army, until the intervention of the other and opposit principle—the Mathematical and Ideal principle of Order or regulated Adjustment. When the Individuals are trained not only to accept but to love, and to love to serve, this Ideal regulativ new element, and its embodied representativ institution, the true Government, it is then that the raw or unripe Individuality becomes harmonized with the higher purposes of organization.

The foregoing statement is not exactly what might be styled light reading, but it yields readily to a little study, and it is hoped that no one will pass it without a fair attempt to understand it. This statement shows that the opponents are only looking at opposit sides of the shield. It is well that the rights of the individual should be emphasized, because they are too apt to be overlooked, in spite of the oft-repeated maxim that the good of one is the good of all. Neither should duties toward society be disregarded, because the good of all is the concern of each.

In endeavoring to show that neither of the parties to the discussion has the whole truth, and that each possesses a half truth, Mr. Andrews is merely bringing together the sundered parts of a unit; in his own words, giving society two legs to stand on instead of one. How his efforts are to be appreciated time will tell.

G. E. M.

Justin Martyr.

The writings of all the apostolic fathers prior to and contemporary with Justin (A.D. 150) do not aggregate more than two hundred printed pages. The undisputed works of Justin alone exceed those of all the contemporary and prior fathers. Justin appears to be the first authenticated Christian who recognizes Jesus as born of the Virgin Mary and crucified under Pontius Pilate, and his information is derived from a gospel not now extant, which he calls "Memoirs of the Apostles," and from the Apocryphal "Acts of Pilate."

The Cardinal.

Stony must be the heart that is not interested in the playful infantil gambolings and songs of young children. Recently the writer paused to listen to and observe the merriment of a small group of young girls forming a ring, with clasped hands, merrily singing (as I supposed) the old childish refrain, "Ring a ring a rosy," etc., etc., as they danced around in a circle; but what was my surprise and abhorrence to hear the following:

"Ding, dong, dell,
All heretics will roast in hell,
Ding, dong, dell."

The average age of the children I should imagin about ten years.

The writer is not opposed to religion, but there is something peculiar in the Catholic religion; peculiar, inasmuch as it not only assumes domination over every other, but inculcates and teaches hatred to all dissenters—particularly the Protestant.

Connecting these reflections with the recent death of a distinguished Catholic cardinal, the following ideas came uppermost. The cardinal had the reputation of great learning and kindness. Fatherly in deportment, meek, and always approachable to the humblest of his parishloners, he was a prelate of the Catholic church, and as such had the direction of immense power in the ministry. His funeral, as it was from being in accordance with the deportment of such a concentration of piety and meekness, therefore is open to criticism. His remains lay in state in his pontifical robes in his favorit cathedral, and were only to be approached through the solemn peal of the immense organ, through smoking incense and demure subserviency.

It strikes the writer (as it must all Liberal minds) that there could be no religion better devised or invented to enslave the human intellect than that of the Church of Rome. It assumes not only temporal or worldly power over the minds of mankind, but also power over their spiritual condition. That we should not seem unjust, let the thinker turn to the New Testament, Matthew xvi, 18, 19: "I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will giv unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

Now, if we believe in the divinity of the New Testament—and many do—here they are, hard and fast, ticketed for heaven or hell at the caprice of an ignorant priest—perhaps a mere boy of twenty-two, dubbed a "holy father," a confessor.

But this world is fast becoming skeptical; and even Protestant believers and church rulers, although they may know this to be an ancient monkish interpolation, dare not admit the fact, fearful of bringing the whole orthodox church fabric about their ears.

But to our cardinal—our learned prelate. The question arises, how could he, as a man of learning, and in all domestic relations irreproachable, so debase his manhood by avowing allegiance to the bloody and cruel hierarchy of the pope of Rome, with its cruel and bloody record of tens of thousands of burnings of advanced thinkers, sages, philosophers, and philanthropists! Or how could he so stultify his intellect as a guardian of morality, sustain the idiot doctrin of "absolution"—the forgivness of sins—which, in effect, is a direct premium for every uncommitted crime! How could he close his eyes to the fact that the greater portion of the criminals in our prisons are of this self-irresponsible belief, or that two out of three of our executed felons are Romanists?

But stop; we as Liberals, as thinkers, should not be too severe on our learned prelate, or censure his method of doing good. He is but one among the many priests, papal or Protestant, who assume the responsibility of doing the thinking and directing the footsteps of all mankind. But of one thing we may be certain—for it is too apparent—that from its power of concentration the Romish church is a religion totally unsuitable to our republican-democratic government.

That this church has a dangerous power of controling its forces was too manifest at our late presidential election. The untimely utterance of the Rev. Dr. Burchard, "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion," however true, was unfortunate; for it started at once all the apostles of St. Peter to their feet, and for the time being emptied all our brothels and dram shops.

Whether it is possible for the world ever to exist in a happy state of oneness without some form of religion based on what is known as an expected future after death, as at present, is a question, but the diversity in competition as to the surest method of salvation must, of necessity, tend to neutralize their power of doing mischief.

As no man, or body of men, ever act without motiv, is it not safe to conclude that the numerical prosperity of any religion depends much upon the number of interested hirelings, outriders, or missionaries of any particular sect? Observe that the unobtrusiv Society of Friends, or Quakers, who are opposed to all hireling priests, after an existence of one hundred years are far, far in the minority when compared with other sects of Christians. Verily, it almost amounts to a truism as spoken by Jesus: "Where the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together." The carcase being wealth, ease, and ostentation. REFORMER.

What the Opposition Say.

ON THE WRONG TRACK.

From the Dallas Morning News.

The Ingersoll Secularists are on the wrong track in wanting to tax church property. It is not by taxation that freedom is advanced.

WHAT LEO, P. P. (PROFESSIONAL POPE) SAYS.

From His Last Encyclical.

There was once a time when the philosophy of the gospel governed states; then it was that that power and divine virtue of Christian wisdom had penetrated into the laws, institutions, and manners of peoples, indeed into all the ranks and relations of the state; when the religion instituted by Jesus Christ, firmly established in that degree of dignity which was befitting, flourished everywhere in the favor of rulers and under the due protection of magistrates; when the priesthood and the government were united by concord and a friendly interchange of offices, and the state composed in that fashion produced, in the opinion of all, most excellent fruits, the memory of which still flourishes, and will flourish, attested by admirable monuments which cannot be destroyed nor obscured by any art of the adversary. If Christian Europe subdued barbarous peoples and transferred them from a savage to a civilized state, from superstition to the truth; if she victoriously repelled the invasions of the Mohammedans; if civilization retained the chief power and accustomed herself to afford others a leader and mistress in everything that adorns humanity; if she has granted to the peoples that and manifold liberty; if she has most wisely established many institutions for the solace of wretchedness—beyond controversy is it very greatly due to religion, under whose auspices such great undertakings were commenced and with whose aid they were perfected. When the kingdom and the priesthood are agreed between themselves, the world is well ruled. the church flourishes and bears fruit.

Men who really believe in the existence of God, if they are to be consistent and not ridiculous, will of necessity understand that the different methods of divine worship involving dissimilarity and conflict, even on the most important points, cannot be all equally probable, equally good, and equally accepted by God; and thus that faculty of thinking whatever you like and expressing whatever you like, to think in writing without any thought of moderation, is not of its own nature, indeed, a good in which human society may rightly rejoice, but, on the contrary, a fount and origin of many ills. Liberty, in so far as it is a virtue perfecting man, should be occupied with that which is true and that which is good, but the foundation of that which is true and that which is good cannot be changed at the pleasure of man, but remains ever the same, nor, indeed, is it less unchangeable than nature herself. If the mind assent to false opinions, if the will choose for itself evil and apply itself thereto, neither attains its perfection, but both fall from their natural dignity and both lapse by degrees into corruption.

The church of Christ is the true teacher of virtue and guardian of morals. From the decisions of the popes it is clearly to be understood that the origin of public power is to be sought from God himself, and not from the multitude; that the free play for sedition is repugnant to reason; that it is a crime for private individuals and a crime for states to observe nowhere the duties of religion, or to treat in the same way different kinds of religion; that the uncontroled right of thinking and publicly proclaiming one's thoughts is not inherent in the rights of citizens, nor to be placed among those things which are worthy of favor or patronage. In private life, indeed, the first duty is to conform one's life and manners to the precepts of the gospels, and not to refuse if Christian virtue demands something more difficult to bear than usual. Individuals also are bound to love the church as their common mother, to keep her laws obediently, to giv her the service of due honor, and to wish her rights respected, and to endeavor that she be fostered and beloved with like piety by those over whom they may exercise authority. It is also of great importance to the public welfare diligently and wisely to giv attention to the duties of citizenship, in this regard most particularly with that concern which is righteous among Christians to take pains and pass effectiv measures, so that public provision be made for the instruction of youth in religion and morality, for upon these things depends very much the welfare of every state. Besides, in general it is useful and honorable to stretch the attention of Catholic men beyond this narrower field, and to embrace every branch of public administration. Generally, we say, because these our precepts reach unto all the nations. But it may happen in some particular place, for the most urgent reasons, that it is by no means expedient to engage in public affairs or to take an activ part in political functions. But generally, as we hav said, to wish to take no part in public affairs would be in that degree vicious, in which it brought to the common weal neither care nor work, and on this account the more so because Catholic men are bound by the admonitions of the doctrin which they profess to do what has to be done with integrity and with faith. If, on the contrary, they were idle, those whose opinions do not in truth giv any great hope of safety would easily get possession of the reins of government. This also would be attended with danger to the Christian name, because they would become most powerful who are badly disposed toward the church, and those least powerful who are well disposed. Wherefore it is evident there is just cause for Catholics to undertake the conduct of public affairs, for they do not assume these responsibilities in order to approve of what is not lawful in the methods of government at this time, but in order that they may turn these very methods, so far as may be, to the unmixed and true public good, holding this purpose in their minds, to infuse into all the veins of the commonwealth the wisdom and virtue of the Catholic religion, the most healthy sap and blood, as it were. It was scarcely done otherwise in the first ages of the church; for the manners and desires of the heathen were divergent as widely as possible from the manners and desires of the gospel. for the Christians, always true to themselvs, most cheerfully entered every walk in life which was open to them. Now, indeed, in these days it is as well to renew these examples of our forefathers. For Catholics, indeed, as many as are worthy of the name, before all things it is necessary to be, and to be willing to be, regarded as most loving sons of the church; whatsoever is inconsistent with this good report without hesitation to reject; to use popular institutions as far as honesty can be to the advantage of truth and justice, to labor that liberty of action shall not transgress the bonnds ordained by the law of nature and of God; so to work that the whole of public life shall be transformed into, as we hav called it, a Christian image and likeness.

CATHOLIC POLICY PUT IN PRACTICE.

From the Catholic Review (immediately after the recent election in this state).

The election of last Tuesday, with all its attendant circumstances, made the lessons of 1884 so clear that the Catholic Review need not dwell on them. What the "independent vote" was, and who cast it in both years, will not be forgotten during this generation.

We observe that a number of men who "failed to come to time" on the Freedom of Worship bills, or who opposed them, hav disappeared from public life. Candidate Attorney-General Thomas, Senator Daggett, Labor Advocate Hooley, Brooklyn Representativ Lewis A. Meyers, hav joined Governor Cornell and Erastus Brooks in that bourne whence no politician returns. "We hav a little list of some who'll not be missed," and so forth.

THE PURITANICAL SABBATH GOING.

From the Christian Advocate.

No man who is interested in the future, either of the church or society, in this country can wisely remain indifferent to the present aspects of the Sabbath question. If we do not misread the signs of the times, our Sabbath will ere long be overwhelmed by the tide of Secularity unless proper measures for its protection are undertaken at once. The rise of this tide has been so gradual, and its advance so insidious, that many are not fully aware that much ground has already been lost, nor that the current is rapidly increasing in volume and velocity. It is even now a serious question with some of the more watchful friends of the Sabbath whether it is not too late to regain what has been surrendered, or even to stay the progress of the evil. Some of the elements of the Continental Sabbath hav already entered into our Sabbath, and while we are at the extreme, perhaps, of reaction from the Puritan Sabbath, the foreign influence exerts its force to carry us still further from the median line. The tendency is to make of our holy day a holiday, and of our day of rest a day of labor. A Sabbath was, a few weeks ago, election day in France, and all the turmoil and excitement of a political canvass attended it. The people were distracted with influences of a purely Secular, if not of a corrupting, character, and the church was dishonored, the day was. dishonored, and God himself was dishonored. We recoil with horror at the thought of such a desecration being possible in our nation. It is a long way from the Puritan Sabbath to the French Sabbath, but no longer than from the Sabbath of the French kings to the Sabbath of the French Revolution, when it was sought to destroy utterly the last vestige of the institution, together with Christianity itself, by decreeing that every tenth day should be observed as a day of rest. A body moving down an inclined plane gathers force with every moment and every foot of progress. It is time to look to our barriers and strengthen them, lest this anti-Sabbath movement get beyond our influence and control.

A CHARITABLE COMPARISON.

From the Troy Daily Times.

Ingersoll's antitheses are so reckless and sweeping as to be self-destructiv. The following are specimens: "There is more spirituality in Burns's poem, 'A man 's a man for a' that,' than there is in the whole of the New Testament." "There is something more spiritual in the sayings of one of Shakspere's clowns than you can find in all the Pentateuch." "There is more spirituality in the Declaration of Independence than there is in all God said to Moses on Mount Sinai." The concentrated hatred of the lecturer toward the Hebrew writings because of their supposed supernatural character is too apparent. He resembles one of those snakes found by Stanley in the Congo, that project their venom "in a stream from a distance of six feet."—Rev. E. Wentworth.

WHOOP!

From the American Christian Review.

We wish to call the special attention of all brethren and sisters to a matter of vital importance to Christianity in America. The Infidels of the United States and Canada hav just perfected an organization, with the title, "The Secular Union of America." R. G. Ingersoll is president, and Charles Watts, of London, England, now making his headquarters in Toronto, Canada, is vice president. They claim to hav over three hundred local leagues, and more than three hundred lecturers, male and female. They claim to hav nearly a score of periodicals that are avowed advocates of Infidelity, and assert that a large portion of the so-called scientific and literary periodicals, sympathize with them, and aid them. They hav several publishing houses and book-stores, and claim that news companies and news stands, and many book-stores, are in sympathy with them, and circulate their books, papers, pamphlets, tracts, and cards. They imitate all the work of our tract societies. They announce that it is their intention to make a vigorous and aggressiv campaign during the coming winter. Ingersoll will doubtless be in the field, when there is most money to be made. He will lecture. He dare not debate. Their main reliance as a debater is Charles Watts. They announce that he is the ablest defender of their system, in debate, now living. Watts is the editor of the Secular Review, the leading organ of Infidelity in England. He has been lecturing for Infidelity for about thirty years. He has had twenty-five set debates with representativs of Christianity. He is the author of about a dozen books and scores of pamphlets, that Infidels regard as among the ablest productions on Infidelity. He has been lecturing in the United States and Canada during the last four or five years.

It has been his custom to hav his lectures announced with a great flourish of trumpets, and Goliath-like, to challenge all preachers and Christians to come and hear, and ask questions, raise objections, make replies or debate. This giv notoriety to his harangs, attracts attention, and enables his backers to bulldoze and taunt believers. It produces in the minds of the rabble the impression that no one dares to defend Christianity or to assail Infidelity. It has been his custom, after each debate, to close up with a whoop of defiance, challenging any other representativ of Christianity who may be so rash as to take up the gauntlet. All his debates except the last two hav been with men hampered with creeds and theologies. He has assumed that an attack on creeds and theologies was an attack on the Bible. His opponents were so hampered with these systems that they had to defend them instead of the Bible. After his debate with Aaron Walker, in Welland, Canada, last Februrary, a change came over the spirit of his dream, and he modified his challenge, and limited it to all Orthodox believers. Evidently he had had enough of debate with a man who defended only the Bible. Last summer the Infidel organization of Canada announced that Charles Watts, who was then in England, would on his return begin a vigorous and aggressiv campaign all over Canada. Mr. Watts would lecture, invite objections and queries, and challenge anyone to reply or debate. On his return, Mr. Watts began the campaign with a lecture in Welland, announced as "A Challenge to the Churches." Infidels announced that he would debate with Clark Braden, who had lectured in Welland not long before. After the lecture he went to Waynesburg, Pa., and debated with Clark Braden. The circular annexed will tell the result. Mr. Watts did not return to resume his "aggressiv campaign" when the debate was over, for he knew that brethren would meet him at every place with Clark Braden's challenge. He was announced to lecture in Pittsburgh, and a challenge was published to any theologian of recognized ability. Brethren accepted the challenge for Clark Braden. Infidels replied, saying the challenge was to all the world, except Clark Braden!

The next that is heard of Mr. Watts is that he is in New England, and wants to lecture in New England. We hav few churches to challenge him in New England. He wants to keep clear of all places where we hav churches to challenge him to meet Clark Braden. We want all brethren and sisters to preserve this paper containing Brother Braden's challenge. If Mr. Watts comes near where they are, publish the challenge in local papers, and show it to Watts's backers. Attend his lectures; challenge him to meet Clark Braden. Write, or telegraph to Campbell Jobes, Claysville, Washington Co., Pa., giving place and date of his lectures, and Clark Braden will rise before him to sear his affrighted eyeballs, as Banquo's ghost arose before Macbeth. Let us drive this Infidel braggadocio to the wall, and nip this Infidel raid in the bud.

CAMPBELL JOBES,
Preaching for the Christian Church, Beeler Station, West Virginia.
P. M. WOODS,
Preaching for the Christian Church, Clarksville, Green Co., Pa.

The Bible Made Me an Infidel.

During a few months past, I hav been thinking and inquiring, reflecting and trying, to ascertain how or by what means I was converted from Christianity to Infidelity. And strange as it may appear, I hav come to the dispassionate conclusion that the simple reading of the Bible has done it. I hav tried to persuade myself that the great change has been effected by reading the writings of Infidels; but I am not able to satisfy myself that the writing of any Infidel alone, or the writings of all that I hav read, when taken together, hav worked out this mysterious result. All my convictions aim directly to the influence of the Bible. Theologians hav always admitted that the Bible itself constitutes its best and most reliable commentary. Indeed, among all the commentaries on both the Old Testament and on the New, I hav never found a more correct and satisfactory commentary than the Bible itself.

From my childhood, there always seemed to be no small amount of obscurity concerning subjects which I thought a wise and all-knowing God ought to hav made perfectly plain and intelligible. Then, again, after having read the Bible through and through (usually once every year), it did not seem to be such a book as a great creator of such a world as this would giv to his creatures.

There seemed to be inaccuracies in its statements, and contradictions in some things and lack of agreement in others. Yet I was assured that it was the veritable word of God, and I must accept it as such. When I was not able to understand it I must believe it all the same. Well, after I became a man, and had decision enough to say that I did not need a priest to think for me and to tell me what I must believe, I perceived so many absurdities and incongruities, and so many unphilosophical statements in it, and so many recorded declarations "for God's own truth," which are nothing but practical impossibilities, that I soon came to the conclusion that no great creator of heaven and earth (even if there is such a being) ever wrote such a book as the Bible.

When I reflected how long a time I had reposed all my confidence for time and eternity in the divine authenticity of the Bible, and then thought that I had been deceived all my life, and did not now believe that the great God of heaven had any more to do with writing the Bible than he had with compiling Webster's Dictionary, I almost shuddered at the contemplation of my own honest opinions. But I hav no more anxiety now concerning the authenticity of the Bible. I feel perfectly satisfied that it is only a production of men who had no more inspiration from the creator of this world than the writer of "Esop's Fables," or the best novels that were ever published. SIGMA.

Eusebius.

To Eusebius, bishop of Cesarea, on the coast of Palestine, from A.D 315 to 340, we are indebted for nearly all we know of church history prior to his time. . . At the very outset of his work Eusebius makes this startling confession and apology for it:

I freely confess it will crave indulgence, especially since, as the first of those that hav entered upon the subject, we are attempting a kind of trackless and unbeaten path. . . We are totally unable to find even the bare vestiges of those who may hav traveled the way before us; unless, perhaps, what is only presented in the slight intimations which some, in different ways, hav transmitted to us in certain partial narrativs of the times in which they lived.

He was a scholar and a courtier, an author and an orator, a bishop and a man of the world. He it was who wrote Constantine's Address to the Clergy, in which the Sibylline Acrostic is cited as proof positiv of the divinity of Christ; and he, too, doubtless approved, if he did not write, the sentiment expressed by that emperor before the Nicene Council, that secret impurity would be less pernicious than public scandal; and if he should happen to surprise a bishop in the act of adultery, he would cast his imperial mantle over the episcopal sinner.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - DECEMBER 26, 1885.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR RENEWALS, and we hope all will be prompt. If we are to print pictures next year, the subscription list must be lengthened. We will renew one old subscription for a year, and send THE TRUTH SEEKER to one new subscriber for a year, for $5. Will not every one, in renewing, try to get a new subscriber?

The Museum Business.

The policy of the directors of the two museums for the opening of which on Sundays the press of this city has been clamoring, and the people petitioning, is at last developed by the application of the secretary of the American Secular Union for an opportunity to be heard upon the question. Their policy is to procrastinate, and wear out the patience of those having the matter at heart.

There are, however, two features in the question which may hasten their action. The most important is, that the Museum of Natural History wants $200,000. The Metropolitan Museum of Art last year received $162,500 from the city to enlarge its buildings, and by Mr. Vanderbilt's death comes now into possession of another $100,000. So that institution is not particularly in need. The directors of the Museum of Natural History being, however, suppliants at the treasury doors, will be considerably more reasonable in the matter, especially as the city officials having the power to grant the money are all in favor of the Sunday opening. And, further, these officers appear disposed to insist on the Sunday opening as a condition of recommending the grant. Nearly all of them, too, hav signed the petition, and their sentiments are known. In a conversation with a Herald reporter Comptroller Loew, who is one of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, said:

"I do not care to discuss at present what the Board of Apportionment will do, as I do not think that it would be proper for me to intimate that appropriations for museum purposes would receive a more favorable consideration at our hands if the demand made by the people and the press to open the museums on Sunday had been complied with. I also had a talk with Mr. Jesup a few days ago, and I stated to him that, in my opinion, the Museum of Natural History ought to be opened on Sunday. I suggested to him the advantages that everybody would derive from having the museums open on that day, so that the great mass of people who can visit them at no other time could then go there with their families. Mr. Jesup said to me: 'Will you agree to giv us $25,000 per year for the maintenance of the Natural History Museum, instead of $15,000 as at present, if it should be opened on Sunday?' The inference I drew was that if we gave the increase the museum would be opened on Sunday, although Mr. Jesup did not say so in so many words. He informed me that to open the museum on Sunday would be to incur extra expense, and that the trustees did not know where to get the money from, except it was appropriated by the board. I told him that the law stated that the sum to be appropriated to the museums must not exceed $30,000. It is within our discretion to appropriate that amount, but not more."

Mr. Loew's intimation that the trustees of the museum would more readily obtain the $200,000 if they promised to open the institution on Sundays was made a positiv condition by Tax-Commissioner Coleman, also a member of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. He told the reporter that so far as he is concerned he should "be guided in passing upon all requests for appropriations to enlarge or maintain these museums by the use that they will be to the public. When the trustees conclude to open these museums on Sunday I shall then consider their applications in a more favorable light." Mr. Sanger, president of the Board of Aldermen, said that "if the trustees had only opened the museums on Sunday when they had been requested to do so by the Park Department and the Board of Aldermen he would feel inclined when this extra appropriation was asked for to comply by voting in favor of at least a part, if not the whole, of the sum which is asked."

If the officials maintain this attitude, the museums will be opened, although Mr. Jesup has such an antipathy to the movement that he will issue a pamphlet against it. But his principal argument, that he has no money to pay expenses, has been anticipated and answered. The money will be voted freely enough, and if the law stops the yearly appropriation at $30,000, perhaps the legislature may change the law, so universal is the desire for Sunday opening. At any rate, what public money is now granted the institutions should be used for the public benefit. Practically the museums are private property exempted from taxation by the state and further subsidized by the city. Either this exemption and subsidizing should cease or the museums should be open when the public can visit them. Even Mr. Jesup must acknowledge that it is unfair that the people should pay for what they do not and cannot get.

The Opposition.

We print this week (p. 823) a few extracts from the sayings of our enemies. We enjoy an occasional excursion into the Christian camp because of the many encouraging signs we are sure to see.

The first saying, from a Dallas paper, we obtained through the medium of an Anarchistic journal which hates the Freethinkers and the state with about equal intensity. It is a queer idea some people seem to hav that it is not by rectifying wrongs, but by committing others, that justice is attained. We should not tax the churches, say the Anarchists, but should abolish all taxes! Therefore they will not aid the Secularists, but rather glory in the church-exemption as a step toward Anarchy. Well, church-exemption has brought Anarchy in many countries, when to save themselvs from the brutal domination of the priesthood the people hav been obliged to confiscate the churches. And the Anarchists of Boston may some time see that particular ideal of theirs realized in this country, if the Secularist idea shall not prevail.

The words of the pope were to be expected. His sentiments hav been known a great while. He wishes to go back to the good old times when the "philosophy of the gospel" governed states, and Christianity was ingrained in every law, institution, and manner of the people, and when the priesthood and the government were united by a "friendly concord and a friendly interchange of offices." This, indeed, would be paradise—for the pope! But it is doubtful if the world can reverse its order of movement and go back so far. These were the times when Catholicism enjoyed herself. Heresy was easily punished. All the faithful had to do was to condemn the heretic, turn him over to the state, and then, by a "friendly interchange of offices," proceed to burn him. Now this is all changed, and the pope naturally grieves. However, he does his best to revive the power of the church by exhorting and commanding his subjects to do what they can to make the governments under which they liv conform to the church ideas. "It is generally useful," says the pope, "to stretch the attention of Catholic men to embrace every branch of public administration." To support this, he instances the early Christians who "cheerfully entered every walk in life which was open to them." If history does not belie these early Christians, they entered a good many walks which were not open to them, the proprietors of the walks being away.

That the pope is likely to be obeyed in his instructions to his people to make the whole of public life a Christian image and likeness, may be seen from the extract from the Catholic Review. In fact, the instructions of the pope were anticipated, and we are all but told in plain words that the "independent vote" in this state is the Catholic vote, thrown whichever way the church directs, for those men who do her will, or against the presumptuous mortals who refuse. The opponents of the Freedom of Worship bill hav disappeared from public life, crows the Review, and the impression is plainly conveyed that their disappearance can be accounted for by applying to the Catholic church. If this be so—and we are far from disputing it—how long will it be, does the Review imagin, before there will be voting done on the other side? Not long, we think.

The wail of the Advocate over the going of the Puritanical Sabbath is a grateful sound. When the Methodists learn something new, then, indeed, is there hope for the world. This individual wail is squeezed from the purple lips of authorativ Methodism by the pressure of public sentiment on the question of opening the museums on Sunday.

The Rev. Mr. Wentworth's comparison of Ingersoll to a snake is peculiarly a Christian thought. Snakes play an important part in the theology of Christianity. Some French artist has pictured the snake, however, as possessing the head of a priest. Such a conceit is a pretty faithful likeness of woman's tempter since Christianity was established, if not before.

The whoop of Elders Jobes and Woods about Braden and Mr. Watts we copy as a text for a few words concerning Braden. Several hav asked us how the debate came out between Mr. Watts and Braden, and why Mr. Watts will not further discuss with his "Christian" opponent. The Freethinkers of Waynesville were deceived in arranging for the debate between Mr. Watts and the fellow Braden. Braden was put forward by Jobes, and indorsed by the Christian (Campbellite) church. Mr. Luse, who made the arrangements for the debate, was unaware of the unsavory character of Braden, and though we wrote him as soon as we heard of the proposed meeting, he considered it too late to withdraw. The debate itself was unsatisfactory. Braden did not adhere to the propositions, did not advance any arguments in support of Christianity, but dealt almost wholly in abuse of Infidels. Mr. Watts bore this for two nights, adhering to the propositions, proving his positions, and disproving those his opponent had engaged to defend, until the last night came. Then, apologizing to the audience for descending in a measure to Braden's level, Mr. Watts gave his opponent such a scoring as those who heard it say seldom falls to the lot of fallen ministers. From what we know of Mr. Watts's powers of sarcasm and ridicule we can well imagin that Braden feels hurt. But such is the unconquerable impudence of Braden that he afterward proposed to Mr. Watts that they make a tour of the country, discussing Christianity. "There is money in it," said Braden. Of course Mr. Watts indignantly refused, and Braden is now writing and getting Jobes to write all manner of abuse of Mr. Watts.

THE TRUTH SEEKER did not take any interest in the Waynesburg debate, feeling somewhat humiliated that Mr. Watts had been so "taken in" as to meet Braden, who is unworthy of any notice whatever. There is hardly a prominent Liberal in the country whom Braden has not slandered, and he piled Pelion on Ossa but a few weeks before this debate by his wholesale libel on the town of Liberal, Mo. Added to this is the fact that he has been in jail for swindling, and escaped a visit to the penitentiary only by a technicality in the indictment, and we think there are sufficient grounds for any reputable person declining to meet him. That Elders Jobes and Woods and their church still sustain Braden and put him forward as their champion, only shows either their ignorance of his true character or their moral obliquity of vision. In the past Mr. Watts has said he was willing to meet any Christian in debate. In the future, although it shuts out Braden, he will qualify his proposition with some such word as "decent."

But, for all that, our batch of opposition grumbles is interesting reading.

Prayer at Harvard.

The fight as to whether students at Harvard shall be obliged or not to listen to prayers is on again. President Eliot is pious, and insists that the students shall also be pious.

But if the real state of things at the college is as an alumnus states in the Evening Post, practical morality, if not religion, will be a great gainer by the abolition of compulsory attendance at alleged worship. "There is no feature of religious observance," says this graduate of Harvard, "which givs rise to so many expressions of disrespect and irreverence as this system of morning prayers. Prayers are looked upon by the average student as a nuisance, and any compulsory religious observance can hardly create other feelings. Prayers are avoided as much as possible, and lying to get rid of them is hardly thought wrong by many, and considered entirely justifiable by some. Petitions by the score for fictitious reasons are handed in every week in the year, and doctors are sought to giv certificates for severe illnesses which do not exist. It is generally understood that the statements in the petitions are taken to be true unless the authorities happen to know to the contrary. So, as there is little danger of detection, and as lying in this case is not considered very wrong, this performance goes on year after year."

The students evidently feel that to thwart tyranny they are justified in resorting to lying. To an unpredjudiced observer, therefore, it would seem that the overseers of the college would do well to remove the temptation by allowing the students to exercise their own pleasure as to attending prayers. A very common form of Christian supplication runs, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." We recommend the overseers to extend to their charges the same leniency in this regard that they ask from one they suppose to be even stronger in power than themselvs.

And the Pot Calls the Kettle Black.

The Home Mission Monthly tells as follows how the pope claims to hav made a great discovery:

"A few months ago Pope Leo XIII. issued a bull announcing the discovery at Compostella, in Spain, of the bones of the Apostle James. He narrates as certain truth a mass of absurd tradition regarding the carrying of the body from Judea to Spain, the loss of all knowledge of the spot where it was buried, the rediscovery of the remains through the appearance of a miraculous star whose rays pointed out the place of interment. With a minute rehearsal of childish fables which we might hav considered a forgery had it not been officially attested, the pope declares that the recently discovered bones are really those of the great apostle."

The editor of the Monthly comments:

"Now when it is remembered that Pope Leo is considered one of the most intelligent and broad-minded of all the men who hav occupied the papal chair, we cannot but be appalled at the thought of the superstition and credulity which must exist in the minds of the more ignorant of his flock."

The editor of the Monthly should first free his own eyes from beams before pointing out the motes in his Christian neighbor's. In Matt. ii, 1, ff., we read:

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

"Saying, Where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we hav seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."

When Herod had ordered the wise men to go to Bethlehem, we are told further that:

"They departed: and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was born."

Now the editor of the Mission Herald probably believes this last story. But if he is one of the most intelligent and broad-minded of the Protestant editors, what really intelligent man can help being appalled at the thought of the superstition and credulity which must exist in the minds of the more ignorant of his readers?

What Hav They to Show for It?

At a meeting held in the Academy of Music, in this city, to chuckle over the sixty-sixth anniversary of the formation of the Methodist Foreign Missionary Society, the Rev. James B. Buckley stated that during its career the society had collected and spent nineteen millions of dollars.

This may be true. No doubt, if the society has raised this sum, that the officers hav managed to spend it down to the last dollar. But we hav the same curiosity that the Sun expressed when considering Dr. Buckley's statement: Hav these nineteen million dollars produced any results at all commensurate with the sacrifice which the givers must hav made to raise so vast a sum? The mission board should stand their converts, of even this generation, up in a row, that they may be counted and the cost per head reckoned. Clear the dry goods out, and put them along on the first floor of the Methodist Book Concern Building, that all New York may see how many there are.

We do not think they would very densely crowd that spacious edifice, for these statements of the Sun are indisputably true:

"It cannot be said that during the last half century Christianity has made any decided advance in the East, where Christian missionaries to the heathen hav expended their chief efforts, and what has been done has in great part been counteracted, or even neutralized, by the greed and cruelty of Christian commerce and conquest.

"India is under the dominion of Christian England, and yet it remains hostil to Christianity.

"China has been compelled to open harbors to Western commerce, and yet it is as far away from Western Christianity as it was a century ago.

"Japan discards its traditional costume, and adopts that of Europe, but it choses for imitation, so far as religion goes, not the faith, but the Infidelity of Christian civilization.

"The only way to get rid of the Mohammedanism of Turkey, experience shows, is to kill off the Mohammedans. The actual conversion of a Mohammedan Turk to Christianity is almost an unheard of thing.

"Christianity in Africa has meant to the nativs chiefly shot and shell, and wholesale slaughter.

What, then, hav these nineteen millions done? They hav furnished fat salaries and comfortable living for the thousands of mission harpies, who use up fifty dollars to get one dollar to a foreign shore, and they hav satisfied the alleged consciences of the three millions of Methodists in the country who gave the money. The donors are complacently satisfied that in paying a dollar for about a thousandth part of a heathen they hav fulfilled their duty, and are consequently entitled to a harp with a little more gilt around it than their neighbors will get.

Editorial Notes.

THE present chaplain of the House of Representativs is blind. "And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

IN the criminal suit agaist him for lecturing on Sunday Mr. Joseph Symes, of Melbourne, Australia, has "stood off" the Christians. The jury disagreed, being evenly divided. We shall be able to giv further particulars when the next Australian mail arrives. We get this scant information via the National Reformer of London.

IT seems that the reason the Austrian government did not want Mr. Keily as the representativ of this country to its court was that his wife is a Jewess. Secretary Bayard retorts that he cannot take the religious opinions of a man's wife into account in making appointments to office, and the Austrian mission very properly remains vacant.

THE Rev. Kristofer Janson, of Minneapolis, is the first Christian minister we hav read of who can discourse of "Ingersoll and Ingersollism" without every other word being a misrepresentation of the great orator's character and doctrins. Judging him from his sermon delivered December 6th to his congregation, we should say that Mr. Janson is a gentleman.

A STATE Senate committee has been exploring the city to find some way of equalizing taxes. One of the committee told a World reporter:

"I may say we hav found that personal property is assessed at only one-eighth of the relativ value at which real estate is assessed. We find, too, many devices on the part ot corporations to evade the tax-collector. Take, for example, the action of the New York Railroad Company in moving its offices to Albany in order to avoid paying its taxes here; and the Elevated Railroad Company's move to Irvington for the same purpose. Then we hav found in some cases that the method of collecting a state tax of three per cent costs the state two-thirds of that amount. There are many evils to be remedied, but I cannot mention them in detail now."

We would respectfully suggest to the committee that one way—and an exceedingly just way—of equalizing taxes in this city is to collect the regular assessment of $24 on a thousand of valuation from the fifty or sixty million dollars' worth of church property now untaxed in this city. A million and a quarter might in this way be added to the city revenues.

"A WORKMAN" writes to the Detroit News, giving some reasons why his fellow-craftsmen do not attend church. Among his reasons are these expressions which he has heard workmen utter: "A preacher in a pulpit always makes me think of a man churning buttermilk. These preachers think they are little gods on wheels, but when you get down to cold facts they don't know any more about kingdom come or the other place than a cast-iron dog. Oh, a preacher is all well enough; the women like to hear him talk, and once in a while he'll find a man he can really benefit by shaking him over the bottomless pit and scaring his life out of him; but a man that knows enough to behave himself hasn't any need of him. There is just this about the preaching business: The preachers claim that the Bible is a message from God to man. If it is so, then the preacher virtually assumes to be smarter than God, for he makes a business of explaining what the Almighty, presumably, wasn't able to make clear himself. If it isn't so, the whole business is founded on a fraud. So I conclude that the preacher must either be super-omniscient or a humbug."

EVIDENTLY the church is short of funds. A revival has been going on recently in this city, meetings being held at Trinity church (which church, by the way, holds some seven millions of dollars' worth of untaxed property), at which the Rev. Mr. Aiken has done his best to scare the wealthy men of Wall street. Here is one of his shrieks to them:

"Do you never think you've got to die, you rich men? It's a healthy occupation to think of it. Do you ever think of the tiny line among the death notices about you? Think of yourself in that hour when you are sinking, sinking, sinking—good God, where?

"O poor rich man! Blown like a leaf into the darkening void. Sinking into ghastly depths with the cry of terrible agony on thy lips—lost! lost! lost! The jaws of death gape to swallow you. And yet your soul might hav been satisfied if you had wished.

"What are you worth? That's the question you hear and you ask everywhere. It is not what your banker has. You only seem to possess what you own; for you are worth only what you are, and there is a bankruptcy court on the other side of the Dark Valley."

Probably if these rich men would contribute a thousand dollars apiece to his church, the Rev. Mr. Aiken would find a more comfortable place for them to drop into when they die.

DURING the week ending November 30th the generous citizens of New York gave the Catholic Protectory $19,414.21; the New York Infant Asylum, $6,506.57; and the New York Juvenile Asylum, $16,725.38.

N. J. TRENHAM, in sending us a collection of photographic views of the Park Region of Minnesota, as well as a new subscriber, incloses also cabinet photographs of W. S. Bell, W. F. Jamieson, and E. C. Walker, three Liberal lecturers who hav visited Mr. Trenham's town the past few months. He asks us to state that any friends of either gentleman can hav a copy for twenty-five cents each, or the three together for fifty cents. We hav an interest in selling these photographs, for Mr. Trenham adds that all the money he receives for them he will spend in buying Liberal books and distribute them in his locality. His address is Alexandria, Minn.

BELOW we giv an abstract of the transactions of the fiuance department of this city for the week ending November 21st, so far as relating to charitable institutions. Money was paid as follows:

Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls,	$ 740 57
Nursery and Child's Hospital,	9,084,18
New York Catholic Protectory,	19,414.21
New York Infant Asylum,	6,506 57
New York Infirmary for Women and Children,	400.00
New York Juvenil Asylum,	16,725 38
Total,	$52,870.91

In connection with the payment of money we note that our city government is made defendant in a suit of the "Sheltering Arms," to vacate an assessment for grading Tenth avenue, which passes by it. By this it appears that the church institutions use some of the money given them by the city to fight the city's charges for improving their property. At a meeting of the board of estimate and apportionment, held November 25th, further sums were voted from the excise moneys to support the institutions named:

Institution of Mercy,	$7,748.14
St. Joseph's Asylum,	4,165.43
St. Stephen's Home for Children,	3 970 43
Mission of the Immaculate Virgin,	8,816.29
Missionary Sisters, Third Order of St. Francis,	3,809.14
Asylum Sisters of St. Dominic,	3,264 57
Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary,	3,030.46
Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans,	1,029 57
St James's Home,	1,204.57
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls,	172 29
St. Ann's Home,	256.86
American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless,	1,024.29
Asylum of St. Vincent de Paul,	499 14
St. Agatha's Home for Children,	1,149.43
St. Michael's Home,	387.71
Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society,	3,174 29
Ladies' Deborah Nursery and Child's Protectory.	3,796.29
Total,	$47,498 90

The foregoing sums were voted for the month of August last only. The Home for Fallen and Friendless Girls for the same month received $218.63.

JAMIESON'S debate with Rev. D. R. Dungan commenced December 22d at Maitland, Mo., to last six days, two sessions each day, on the following propositions: 1. "Infidelity is better calculated to advance mankind morally, physically, and intellectually than Chistianity." Jamieson affirms. 2. "The Bible is the best guide in morals and agrees with science." Dungan affirms. Jamieson's debate with Rev. J. W. Damon on "Prophecy" will take place at Savannah, Mo., Dec. 29th, 30th, 31st, and Jan. 1st.

Pennsylvania State Liberal Convention.

In compliance with the requirements of the Constitution, and by and with the advice of the Executiv Committee, it has been decided to hold the Second Annual Convention of the Pennsylvania State Liberal League at Lafayette Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Friday, January 29th, 1886, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Representations of every League and district, organized or unorganized, throughout the entire state, are cordially invited.

We especially solicit the Liberals of the state to be present at our morning session, to take part in the business meeting, when the work of the League will be set forth, and the matured judgment and suggestions from the best workers and thinkers are needed to decide on the best means of carrying on the work, forming local and district Liberal Unions, affording educational and social advantages, effecting more efficient organization, and in the selection and election of officers for the energetic carrying out of the program decided on.

There are many matters of importance to be brought before the Convention, among others, the change of name to that of "Pennsylvania State Secular Union."

We trust that every lady and gentleman having interest in the cause will realize the necessity of making especial efforts to be present, so that by united effort the state organization may be made a powerful factor in the great work of securing the Nine Demands of Liberalism, insuring equal rights and privileges to all, regardless of religious faith, or the lack of it.

Those attending the Convention will be enabled to participate in the Grand Paine Birthday Celebration, under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Secular Union, who in catering acceptably for Liberals' mental and physical needs hav never been surpassed.

WM. SEYMOUR, President.

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS, Secretary.

December 19th, 1885.

Letters from Friends.

EL PASO, TEX., Dec. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I think the idea of illustrating THE TRUTH SEEKER a very good one, and shall do my best to get new subscribers for it from this part of the country.

I beg to suggest, also, that you reserve a space in your paper for the publication of the principal officers of the local Leagues or Secular Societies belonging to the American Secular Union, giving the address of the secretary of each, and, if possible, the time of their regular meetings. Such information, I am sure, would be welcome to many Freethinkers whose occupation or business compels them to travel most of the time. If this were done once a month, or once in three months, it might fill the bill. CHAS. PETERS.

MAITLAND, MO., Nov. 25, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: May I claim the privilege, through the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, to tell what we are doing down in our moral vinyard in interest of the infant cause? We hav secured and had delivered two courses of lectures within the last three months by Prof. W. F. Jamieson, and hav arranged for a debate between W. F. Jamieson and a Mr. Dungan, for the 22d of December; and last, but not least, there was a course of lectures delivered here on the 19th and 20th of this month by Helen H. Gardener, which hav had and will hav some good effect. She was greeted with splendid and intelligent audiences who were loth to retire at the end of each lecture. Miss Gardener is rather small in point of avoirdupois, but in point of intellect she is a giant. She has splendid delivery, holding her subject in hand with ease, and the same time with that firmness of decision that is pleasant and convincing. It would be hard for one to pay a fitting tribute to the little lady. I would advise all our Liberal friends wishing lectures in the interest of our cause to secure the services of Miss Gardener if possible.

Respectfully, F. B. SPRINGS.

REW CITY, PA., Nov. 26, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Thanks for your excellent management of the glorious TRUTH SEEKER. Thanks for the privilege of renewing my subscription to this trifling extent, and for the courage to speak aloud the principles culled from its pages, and to declare I will never be without it while I can spare a dollar to send you for it. At different times in the last two years we hav found by the outspoken result of thought and reason, and the circulation of tracts and books, enough Liberals to hav organized quite a respectable club, but the fluctuations of trade in the oil fields render our stay in one place so uncertain that the attempt was impracticable on account of the certainty of its failure, as I hav reason to believe is the case in the city of Bradford, the metropolis of the oil country. I would be thankful for life to see the day when the ignorance and superstition of orthodoxy will be cleared away, and teachers be compelled to pass an examination in the sciences.

W. N. WEST.

MONMOUTH, ILL., Nov. 15, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1 to get me within hailing distance at least. We shall hav to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER at all events. It is our Sunday reading and better than all the orthodox sermons preached in the land. I see by this morning's paper that Birmingham, Alabama, has gone back to the dark ages in her new Sunday laws. Well, if the people there can stand it, I don't know but that we can who are so far away.

The U. P's. here circulated petitions to hav the trains on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad stop running cars on the Sabbath. But this road, which is running from thirty-five to fifty trains a day, does not see it in that light, so the passengers do not hav to be put to such delay and expense, and freight is moving as rapidly as usual over this, one of the best (if not the best) roads in the country.

Sunday was made for man, and man alone is responsible as to how he uses or abuses it. All the cant of preachers to the contrary does not affect this truth. One day for rest or recreation is just as necessary as light and heat, and let us all make the best use of the privilege. S. W. SMITH.

GREENSBURG, PA., Dec. 1, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: While the discussion that is now going on in regard to the successor of the president, should he die or be disabled during the present juncture caused by the death of the vice-president, is taking a wide range. some going so far as to declare it unconstitutional for any office-holder to fill his place, even temporarily, I should think that some would see of what little consequence it is whether we hav any president at all. If the president of the Senate were authorized to sign all bills and appointments to office, what would be the use of a president or vice-president? The cabinet offices could be filled by the Senate and House of Representativs, and each would make his own appointments with the consent and advice of the Senate, as now. Then what is gained by having a president elected every four years, exciting the people and spending thousands of dollars, injuring every legitimate business, to elect a president, who, perhaps, may be antagonistic to the majority in Congress, causing four years of wrangling and clogging the wheels of government for that time, when, if the president of the Senate performed the duties of president, he would always be in accord with the majority (as it would take a majority to elect him) of the Senate, and there would be no jangling? Hundreds of thousands of dollars would be saved, besides the fifty thousand that now goes as the president's salary. J. DOWNES.

CHILLICOTHE, O., Dec. 7, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I hope Mr. Mallonee will forgiv the fact that I was much surprised by his Saint Paul like attack upon woman suffrage, as I am about to claim the privilege always granted by that just and unbiased judge, THE TRUTH SEEKER, of pointing the finger of friendly comment at one or two of his inconsistencies. He asserts that his wife "and all the women of her class would not vote." Must all the women of the United States be refused the ballot because of that fact? Mrs. Mallonee would not be compelled to vote if she did not desire to, while Mr. Mallonee is no doubt a paragon of all domestic virtues, whose one individual ballot may be safely relied upon to represent his wife, daughters, "his sisters and his cousins and his aunts"—even his mother-in-law if she be a widow. It is possible that some men in this great commonwealth are not so qualified. Mr. Mallonee refers to "strong-minded females" as all being "old maids." Admitting this (but there are widows among them), who, may I ask, is to do their thinking and acting for them? I myself am one of those much-despised strong-minded old maids, a Freethinking Spiritualist, but not a Freelover in any but a Christlike sense of the term. Now, supposing I desire to vote against a Sunday law, what am I to do? Must we be restricted by Mrs. Mallonee and women of her class? Has our misguided brother overlooked the fact that among the foremost toilers in the fair fields of reform are many "old maids" who for years hav been demanding the privileges extended to the ignorant African and the drunken American? If, after calm reflection, Mr. Mallonee still believes that liberty is a blessing only when possessed by the sterner sex, I would advise him to join the Presbyterians and to teach the ancient doctrin of Saint Paul to people who hav not outgrown the idea that a woman must forever be a mirror, reflecting only the virtues or vices of her lord and master. The inclosed poem was written long before I saw Mr. Mallonee's article, and though it may sound a trifle harsh, is not intended to be personal, excepting as a reply to personal remarks. Hoping Mr. Mallonee will accept my comments and queries with the same friendly spirit in which they are sent, I remain forever a Freethinking, strong-minded old maid.

A VINDICATION.

It is frequently said by a prejudiced few
That "strong-minded females" are coarse and low;
I know that some people believe this true,
But inquiry proves that it is not so.
In a skating-rink, 'mid the giddy whirl
I beheld the mother of children two;
She was known in youth as a reckless girl,
And since as a wife who is far from true.

I said to this matron of doubtful fame,
As we glided on 'neath the dazzling lights,
"Will you kindly deign to affix your name
To my list of toilers for women's rights?"
In tones of decided severity,
She said, "Do you take me, sir, for a fool?
A woman should liv for her family,
It is not her mission the world to rule."

I entered a ballroom and met a dame
Who bore the brand of society's slave,
To lead the fashions had been her aim,
In radiant gems she approached her grave.
I said to her, "Madam, your name I crave
As an aid on my woman's suffrage list."
To me a contemptuous stare she gave,
"I am not a fanatic, sir," she hissed.

I questioned a creature than whom few worse
Hav ever darkened this beautiful earth;
Upon all things pure she had breathed her curse,
And to many vile deeds had given birth.
I asked, as I gazed on her beautiful face
And into her dissolute, bloodshot eyes
Though I knew the question was out of place
And wondered much what would be her reply:

"Do you think that women should hav the right
Of casting votes, or help make the laws?
If so, are you willing your name to write
With those who are friends to the woman's cause?"
She took my pen in her talon-like claws
And these are the words the reprobate wrote:
"I decline to giv you my name, because Saint Paul did not think women ought to vote."

Thus each old hag that I questioned replied,
And each young girl who had strayed from the right,
And many a matron devoid of pride,
That their names on my list they would not write.
Those women whose lives were an empty show;
And those most deficient in heart and brains,
Who believed they knew all there was to know,
Denounced my list with pronounced disdain.

But the silver-haired dames with records pure,
Those mothers whose children were cared for best;
Those brides with integrity most secure;
And girls with decorum and prudence blest;
Those who nursed the ill and dying by night;
Those who sought to reform the low and depraved;
Those who helped to fight the foes of the right;
That mankind from their errors might be saved—

Lo! these were the ones who willingly signed
Their names to my list as wise women ought,
With unselfish hearts and impartial minds,
For righteousness's sake, and freedom of thought.
Thus it is ever; an unstable mass
Hav checked the march of progression each day.
"Strong-minded women" contend with this class,
And use all their strength in clearing the way.

EIDDA.

TONTOGANY, O., 1885

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a Republican all my (voting) life, but two years ago I voted for Hoadly on account of his Liberal views. Soon after the election I took a trip to Florida, and on my way I stopped at several places, among the rest Atlanta, Ga. While there I went to see General McPherson's monument, and while roaming over the battle-field I came across an old, very old, colored man, with whom I had an interesting talk. His deep, sad tones revealed his forlorn condition; his sad countenance showed that his last smile had long since taken wings and flown away, never to return. I would gladly relate the whole of our conversation, but fear it would be too lengthy. I shall quote the speech that he delivered to me (one never to be forgotten). In deep, pathetic tones, he said:

"I spent all my days of strength, and all the days of my usefulness, in your service, and now I am old and crippled with the 'rhumatiz,' which makes me almost helpless, I am turned out like an old horse to pick up what I can and then starve. I see you are a stranger here, looking for relics. You must hav plenty of money. Can't you giv me a little? I am so needy."

After I got my heart swallowed down sufficiently to speak, I informed him that he did not know whom he was addressing; that I was from the North; that I earned all the money I had by hard work with my own hands and. mind. I asked him why young colored people could not help the old. His answer was:

"All of our best men are on the chain-gang in the mines, and it is all the next best can do to take care of themselvs, and the old are in a starving condition. I hav a little job of wood cutting here, as you see, which will help me a right smart bit, but when that is done I don't know what I will do to make a living."

I asked him if he could not get enough to eat. He said, "Sometimes I hav something to eat and sometimes I havn't." I gave him what loose change I had, without counting, and departed a sadder but wiser man.

I hope the day is not far distant when we Secularists will be able to buy a home for all such as the above, and gather them to it in the name of humanity. I presume there are some Christians and Jews whose hearts are sufficiently tender to aid us in the noble work. Let us make haste lest it be too late to assist the most deplorable class (ex-slaves). If this old man could deliver a five minutes' lecture in every town in the North we could raise the money to buy a home for all—such is my opinion. Please pardon the digression.

This fall, when I went to the election, the sound of those clanking chains was still ringing in my ears; therefore, I could not vote for Hoadly. When we make our Nine Demands an issue, I shall be ready to vote them. M. BROWN.

WALKERTON, ONT., Dec. 12, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking it would be interesting to you and the patrons of THE TRUTH SEEKER to know what we are doing to advance the cause of Freethought in this section of Canada, I, at the request of several Liberal friends, take the liberty of sending you this short report of three lectures, recently delivered here by Mr. Chas. Watts, being his second engagement in this place, and it pleases me to say he was attentivly listened to both times by large and well-behaved audiences. The subject of the first lecture was "Secularism, Destructiv and Constructiv." It is no more than just and fair to say that I do not think it could hav been handled better, and that it was thoroughly sound throughout. Some of the most intelligent and non-prejudiced Christians who heard the lecture, and with whom I conversed about it, said they agreed with the most of it and that it would be difficult to answer the rest of it. The arguments seemed to me impregnable. The second was on "Unbelief—Its Nature and Value to Mankind." It rather surprised most of the orthodox attendants to learn they were all unbelievers, and that all change and reform is the result of unbelief in the existing and established order of things. They seemed to appreciate this lecture better than the former one, perhaps because they understood it better.

The third one was on the "History of the New Testament." I suppose it is at least not necessary to state that quite a number of the hearers were made uneasy, especially those who had discarded the Old Testament and pinned their faith to the New, when Mr. Watts quoted largely from Christian writings and authorities to prove that the origin of the New Testament is and always has been unknown, that there were other gospels besides Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; that they did not write the ones ascribed to them, and that if any of them were genuin they did not know which, etc.

Mr. Watts is a very forcible and logical speaker, and often eloquent during his discourse, and to giv only an approximate account of these lectures would require a lengthy article which probably you would not like to publish in your over-contributed paper.

Trusting you will consider this very inadequate report worthy of publication, I remain, Fraternally yours,

J. H. BOBIER.

HAMILTON, ONT., Dec. 11, 285.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Watts has again paid us a visit, and, like a brilliant meteor illuminating this most orthodox neighborhood, he has disappeared for a short season only, we hope, as the two discourses he rendered were considered by those who heard them as the grandest they had ever heard him giv in Hamilton. Several attempts hav been made (both through the press and privately) to induce the orthodox champion, Dr. Sexton, to enter the arena of debate with our representativ, but the wily doctor knows too much to trust himself on the platform with an opponent such as Charles Watts. There seems to be quite a dearth of orthodox sentiment just now, and the clergy find it uphill work drumming sheol into their hearers. It has not the terror that the old orthodox hell had, with its brimstone dungeons and devils, its darkness, its chains and fire; these things hav been no longer believed in except in popish theology and the Salvation Army, both of which we hav amongst us. The latter craze seems stagnant. They are not so blatant as they were, and many who formerly belonged to them are now ashamed of their unseemly and grotesque antics on the streets. I am pleased to let you know that a large quantity of Freethought literature has been sold at every Freethought lecture, the people being hungry for more knowledge. I had the pleasure of witnessing an incident which will illustrate the growing desire for more information: At the afternoon lecture, a well-dressed lady (unaccompanied) came to the entrance of the hall, and it could be seen at once by the timidity of her movements that she was a stranger to our meetings. She put the inquiry, "Are there any ladies present?" "Oh, yes, madam, a great many," was my answer. This seemed to afford her some satisfaction, and she paased into the room and took a seat well toward the front. It was evident to me that she had not been to any of our previous lectures, and I therefore concluded I would watch the effect of the lecture upon her, and observe the different changes in her countenance as the gifted orator explained the principles of the American Secular Union, their necessity, superiority, and justice. To describe the changes from grave to gay and vice versa, I will not attempt, but it was evident she had been greatly edified, for I noticed that she had induced her husband to accompany her to the evening lecture on "Unbelief." Both of them gave vent to their appreciation as pronounced as any in the hall, and I noticed at the close of the lecture that they went to the table (where one of the friends sold our literature) and purchased a copy of Paine's "Age of Reason." We shall see that lady and gentleman again, I am sure, on Mr. Watts's next visit, and more books will be sold. I may tell you that since Mr. Watts's first visit to this city two years ago, we hav sold nearly two hundred copies of Paine's "Age of Reason," a work more dreaded by the clergy than the advent of small-pox. Hundreds of copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER hav been put in circulation, and when it becomes an illustrated weekly journal, which all of your subscribers should hope for, then what a mighty howl will ascend from the pulpits of Christendom, and Hamilton in particular! The so-called reform press of the city ignore our lectures, but are always eulogistic of any crank who shines under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. Whilst this is so, the Conservativ or Tory journal, the Spectator, givs us an impartial and friendly notice whenever we meet, with a synopsis of the lecture. I can well understand our Materialistic friend Winter, of Cincinnati, calling Spiritualists by the euphonious name of crank. We had one on the platform to reply to Mr. Watts, and he told the audience that he had seen the future home of the damned, the orthodox hell. He had been privileged to see, also, the golden stairs and the heaven of the Sunday-school books. It was apparent to the audience that he was what he professed, a Spiritualist, or what friend Winter would call a crank. Yours as ever for the truth,

GEORGE MADDOCKS.

LOWELLVILLE, O., Dec. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: The effort to screen the Albany Convention from contamination seems to me to hav been, to say the least, uncalled for. It was a Freethinkers' convention, and Freethinkers were invited and urged to attend. Unlike the church, the association does not indorse the character of its members, and deliver over to Satan or cast out any one heresy, and it follows that it is not responsible in any way for for the character or reputation of those who may attend or take part in the proceedings of conventions. And this is as it should be, though different from church rules and practices. To exclude those who most need the benefit of good influences from philanthropic institutions of any kind would seem to be irrational and absurd.

When people attend a Freethinkers' convention they do not expect the platform to be converted into a coward's castle like the pulpit. Where no two agree, or think alike on the various subjects of reform which loom up for consideration after a reign of ignorance, darkness, and superstition for thousands of years, it does not seem to be quite the fair thing for some individuals—even officials—to assume the prerogativ of making rules as to what may be said and done; thus infringing upon the right of free speech, which seems so closely allied to Freethought.

Some or us, who lost our reputation forty or fifty years ago by opposing slavery, and soon after lost it again by advocating Freethought on the subject of religion, and hav suffered many degrees of social ostracism ever since, do not feel disposed to allow new converts to compel us to giv up what we hav sacrificed so much for and battled for so long, to wit, freedom of speech and equal rights for all, even in conventions, and hav things brought down to a respectable basis to accommodate those who hav not learned that there is no respectable basis for reforms until they are accomplished.

And how strange it would seem for an association of Freethinkers—in imitation of the church—to proclaim to the world that Freethought and free speech, heresy and heretics, would not be permitted to come within the sacred precincts of its conventions or meetings.

It is claimed, however, that the speakers were of the right kind, both at Albany and Cleveland, and that there was program enough to take up the whole time, just as though that compensated for everything. It is also said that an opportunity was given for discussion on all topics presented. The time, however, was taken up by the program, and when anyone attempted to break in on it, they were generally sneered at by some one and laughed at by others. And the program was often or sometimes followed without giving proper time for discussion, as it seemed to me. Thus: "You hear the resolution, all in favor say 'Aye.'" A few say "Aye." Those opposed will manifest it by the same sign, it's a vote." All the stops were commas, and no time given for any one to consider whether he was opposed to it or not.

There has been a good deal written and said about the necessity of organization, and quite an effort made to induce Liberals of the country to unite with or become members of the National Liberal League and its auxiliaries, and many of the different varieties hav done so.

The call for the late Convention or Congress at Cleveland says: "The basis of the Association is Universal Mental Liberty, and its platform the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Its object is to stimulate Freethought and investigation among the people in regard to their civil, religious, and political rights, and to encourage the investigation of questions relating to religion, science, and reform."

And one of the Nine Demands is that "all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality." Now, it seems to me that this ought to secure a free platform, and the privilege of free discussion to anyone who may wish to discuss any of the subjects embraced in the call or in the Nine Demands, and in his own way. Opinions may be different as to the ways and means of obtaining the Nine Demands, as well as the one or two which were added.

If all who differ from a few managers are to be excluded from participation in the proceedings, and all heresy or unpopular subjects, too, the creed ought to be stated in the call. Associations of this kind are only responsible for what may be adopted as a platform, and not for error and falsehood, heresy, and folly uttered by individuals in discussion. To call upon all the varieties of Freethinkers to attend these meetings, and when there to make them behave according to some narrow-minded standard and keep silent, is an undertaking that is likely to fail.

The Nine Demands, or some of them, forty years ago were just as unpopular and disreputable as those subjects which now secure the name of crank and other opprobrious names to those who advocate them. And those who by sacrifice and suffering hav made the Nine Demands somewhat respectable hav no objections to others sailing on the popular current, but they do object to their joining the multitude in denouncing advocates of those Demands because they are in favor of other reforms which are, or may be, just as important (or more so) as any of the nine.

Freethinkers generally were invited and urged to attend the Congress—to giv emphasis to the proceedings and to the Demands; but the officers and all the speakers were of the same variety, to wit, Materialists. The Spiritualists, however—and there were quite a number of them there—behaved well and said nothing, and consequently it was not necessary to advertise them as strays, and the Association as in no way responsible for their behavior or for their attendance. It seems to me that Freethinkers can in no way be united but on a free platform—I mean free discussion, and the Union responsible only for what it may adopt as a platform of principles. Freethought implies free speech, and freedom must be taken with the inconveniences and consequences incident thereto, freedom being a necessity, and always preferable to the gag or the bondage of a creed. And discussion is always necessary to keep the wheels of progress in motion; and when suppressed, meetings of every kind become nurseries of egotism and intolerance. And we need a panacea for these idiosyncrasies much more than we need nurseries.

Intolerance has been a curse of the ages, and ought not to be cherished among Liberals; and discussion is quite an effectiv remedy for this relic of Christian barbarism. Yes, listening to error, silly twaddle, and even something abhorrent to our sense of propriety and right, is good as a cure for intolerance, and not at all dangerous on a free platform. Witness THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Manhattan Liberal Club—they both liv and prosper, though free discussion is a prominent feature. Let intolerance cease, but let us hav free discussion; hear both sides, and gather truth and wisdom wherever they may be found.

WM. WATSON.

BAKERFIELD, CAL., Dec. 3, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 on subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I find quite a number of Freethought persons here, but all too timid to express their thoughts or opinions for fear of being termed a crank or lunatic; others are afraid they would lose custom. We need what the churches term a revival, a good lecturer to stir them up to think for themselvs. We hav two churches here, one Catholic and one E P. M. church, which has its beggars for the erection of another church.

ISAAC GAMBEL.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12, 1885.

MR EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 14th appears an article from J. H. Severance, M.D., with which I fully agree, and it will not be answered, nor can it be controverted. In THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 5th Mr. G. N. Hill comes out to unfold his great wisdom and let Freethinkers know what an "honest" (?) Freethought meeting should be like. He would giv us all the freedom to assent and follow a few leaders, who should be the sole judges of what is right and judicious to allow in such meetings. He would giv us all the liberty to vote for resolutions the leaders may bring in their pockets ready cut and dried, to pass them, and to punish all dissenters. This is a concensus for "babes," but it will never do for Freethinkers. Mr. Hill may be an Infidel as to Bible belief, but he misses the first principles of Freethought yet. So also in to-day's TRUTH SEEKER (December 12th) Mr. D. B. Cozine has a long article of similar conservativ freedom, the same freedom the Protestant and also the Catholic church will giv to any and all who follow their regulations—no more, no less. Messrs. Hill and Cozine cannot see their narrowness, or else they ought to know that Mitchell and Heywood can not be more obnoxious to them than they themselvs are to the Christians.

There are many grades of Freethought. The most developed giv us the widest scope, and the least and weakest wants and asks for all kinds of regulations, laws, hedges, and fences; and, according to Mr. Cozine, anyone not satisfied had better emigrate. Would it not be better to burn such a one up, and be done with him for ever, as of yore? Would this not suit him better?

I hav never seen a paper from Messrs. Mitchell or Heywood and need not defend them, but will defend Freethought, and ask these would-be Freethinkers to argue and controvert these men out of their—to them—obnoxious doctrins, if they can; and if they cannot, then their side is shown to be weak.

Messrs. Hill and Cozine's opinions are fully as obnoxious now to the church, but what is obnoxious to-day may become popular to-morrow.

However, in this long controversy I admit that if any one or more persons pay for a hall, such payers hav a good right to make their own rules, but the more fenced in, the less freedom there exists. And further, it is good policy to unite with any and all forces for one purpose—as for the Nine Demands—to which even many Liberal Christians will giv us their support—than to split our power and influence for many aims with less aid.

We suffer now from too many bad laws, and such cursed and nonsensical laws hav we that they were never, are not, and never will be obeyed, and cannot be, and are dead letters. I cannot believe and cannot see how anyone can commit a crime when he has not harmed and does not harm anyone.

What we the most need is a better education in good, sound principles, which will make us better and freer with less laws, will make millionaires and paupers equally unknown.

Yours for progress, FREDERICK KOEZLY.

OLD DU QUOIN, ILL, Dec. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $5—$3 00 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1886; $1.50 for Dr. Sunderland's "Ideology;" 30 cents for "Short Lessons in History," six copies; 20 cents for the "Modern Balaam," eight copies.

Permit me to congratulate you upon your able and successful management of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and to express my unqualified approval and indorsement of its editorial department. I hav been a subscriber from the beginning, and hav closely read every number of THE TRUTH SEEKER ever issued, and although always good and interesting, there has been a constant improvement noticeable, and I now regard it as better than ever, and by far the most entertaining paper of the six (leading papers) I read. Yours truly, CHARLES ZEIGLER.

TRENTON, TEXAS, Dec. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, which place to my credit on THE TRUTH SEEKER account; $1 for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER to the trial subscribers herein named; also twenty cents, for which send Remsburg's "False Claims of Christianity," and Ingersoll's "Defense of Thomas Paine as to his Life, Death, etc.," to the address given. With the best wishes for the Secular movement, and the growth and spread of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am yours, THOS. H. MAUGUM, M.D.

NEW ALBANY, IND., Dec. 10, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith please find $3 to pay for my copy of your valuable and indispensable paper, the dear old TRUTH SEEKER, for another year. I am now in my seventy-ninth year, and find great comfort and satisfaction in its perusal.

JOHN BROWN.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 4, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Some time has elapsed since my last communication to THE TRUTH SEEKER. But I am still living and trying to wake up the mental energies of the people in my section of "Puritanic New England," and enlist them in the cause of truth. I distribute my papers freely among those who will read them, hoping thereby to win subscribers.

I am a member of a Liberal Debating Society, recently formed, and I am hoping to get them to organize a local union in conjunction with the American Secular Union. The question for next Sunday is "Resolved, That the Bible should be read in the schools," which proposition will, no doubt, be torn all to shreds.

Before closing, I must mention my visit to your city last September. Though short, it was one of the pleasantest occasions of my life.

I had the good fortune to become acquainted with Mr. C. P. Somerby and family, by all of whom I was entertained in the most agreeable manner.

The six hours spent in Central Park, with its many attractions; the trees decked in their autumnal garb; the thousands of parti-colored dresses, moving to and fro to the music of the band, resembling a great moving panorama of "crazy quilts," and all enjoyed in the company of so entertaining a gentleman as Mr. Somerby, impressed that Sunday on my mind in a manner never to be forgotten.

Wishing success to the Truth Seeker Company, I am yours,

W. P. BLYTHE.

AYER, MASS., Dec. 8, 1885.

MR. EDITOR: Having read the call to arms for battle of might against right, I would ask, What would the wards of our spiritual welfare hav us do on Sunday? Empty the mind, fast from all tangible facts—every thought and idea of the real—in this beautiful world, in order to force an appetite for doleful sermons on total depravity; and through wordy prayers get an introduction to God, and improve the opportunity in thanking him that he has not wholly cursed us for trying to be happy in this world of beauty.

Why don't these keepers of the fold instruct the Lord to adopt his old commissary plan of deal, and hav the cows constructed upon that wise plan, that they will double their yield of milk on Saturday, and so contemplate the divine economy, instead of assimilating food on Sunday, and so prove "all things possible?" It looks very much like a business contract to giv one day in every seven to the Lord, in which to praise him for his "wonderful goodness," and keep him good-natured and blind to their conscious errors and presumptiv sins. When the clergy turn their attention to the popular sins that afflict and degrade humanity, instead of persecuting, slandering, and calling pet names such as are thus engaged, they will hav struck the keynote of the song of "Moses and the Lamb," the embrace of heaven and earth—heaven on earth.

The Sabbath—one day in seven—is among the best institutions the stream of time has brought down to us. A day of rest—change—neither sleep nor death—perpetual activity is life. The Sabbath—a day exempt from manual labor—is in the very nature of things under the great law of necessity, and would be if "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" had not been in the Bible. Suppose we should remember every "day to keep it holy," instead of one day in which to confess how unholy we had been in the other six.

The problem is how best to use this grand blessing so as to extract the greatest amount of good from it. "Let everyone be persuaded in his own mind," and be deferential to the rights of all others. As competition is the life of trade, so variety of opinions is the soul of progress.

The difficulty begins in contention; when, instead of mutually lighting by each others' candles, we authoritativly attempt to blow them out.

E. MYRICK.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Children's Christmas Visit to Fairyland.

Then they went to the Land of Cakes,
The Ice Cream land where the Jelly-tree shakes,
Where Blanc Mange rocks are white and cold,
And crystallized Jujubes shine like gold,
Like yellow gold in a sunset bright,
Like sovereigns new in a glorious light;
Where the Plum Cake mountains rise so grand,
Overlooking the plains of the Biscuit Land;
Where the trees are ripe with the lemon drops,
And sugary snow still crowns their tops,
And sugar snow is down below.
And the children play on the Almond Rocks,
While the elves prepare a big toy box,
To take away as a Chrismas treat,
Of toys and every sort of sweet,
Piled up to the brim with toys;
Dolls for the girls and tops for the boys,
With a heigh heave ho!
The ropes they hug.
And over the plains the box they lug,
And the children, dressed in gloves and muff,
Kick about in the sticky stuff.
Till they're helped out by Puck and his elves,
They're quite unable to help themselvs.
And the toys are stacked,
And the box is packed;
Sweets, and tops, and dolls for all,
Not a single one let fall—
Stowed away with art so rare,
Labeled, "This side up with care,"
Then in a great big wagon placed,
Firmly, solidly encased,
Off they're sent by fairy train,
Never to return again.

Mistletoe and Holly Green.

A GIFT DAY (CHRISTMAS) SONG.

The mistletoe grows in the forest hall;
Bravely each little bird sings,
Fat little fellows like feathered balls,
With merry hearts under their wings.

"O mistletoe, mistletoe,
Green may you ever grow!
Summer burns and winter chills,
Life has pains and life has ills,
But joy livs on forever!"

On the bank green hollies grow,
Loudly chatters a squirrel,
A saucy fellow with merry eyes,
Coquettish as a girl.

"O holly, holly, holly,
Wisdom livs in all that's jolly!
Your green leaves show life goes on,
Your red fruit that blood flows on—
Joy livs on forever!"

The mistletoe hangs in the festiv hall,
Gayly the children sing,
Little folks short, and little folks tall,
'Til they make the welkin ring,

"O mistletoe, mistletoe,
Green may you ever grow!
Sign of never-dying youth,
We will not forget your truth,
Joy livs on forever!"

Scarlet holly berries glow
In the yule log's light,
Merry little folks below,
Sing with rare delight.

"O holly, holly, holly,
Wisdom livs in all that's jolly!
We'll hav cheer as life goes on,
Just as sure as blood flows on,
Joy livs on forever!"

J. WM. LLOYD

Christmas Time.

The observance of Christmas is old as the hills. It is of Pagan origin, and was originally celebrated as the festival of the winter solstice. A host of beautiful recollections cluster around it from time immemorial. Decorating with evergreens comes from the old Druids, who worshiped in leafy temples, amid the somber shade of green trees. The mistletoe was held in great veneration, and the high priest of the Druids used to cut it with a golden sickle, while, at the same time, two snow-white bulls were tied beneath the oak and sacrificed. It was thought that it would save from poison, and protect one from evil spirits. There are many superstitions relating to Christmas-tide, some of them quite funny. For instance, it was thought that bread baked on Christmas eve would never get moldy—a foolish idea, as bread baked at any time of the year will mold if kept long enough. In some parts of Wales they bake eleven Christmas puddings, one for each of the apostles, except Judas, and these are eaten, one by one, the last as the year is finished, in order to hav good luck. In Devonshire, they dip a hot cake in cider, and carrying it to the orchard, guns are fired, and the company sing:

"Bear good apples and pears;
Barns full, bags full, sacks full."

This is done to insure, as they think, a good fruit year. In Scotland, it is considered very unfortunate to spin on Christmas, fearing, if they did, the cattle would run mad or limping.

It is said that the people of Kronz, on the Moselle, wrap a wheel in straw, and roll it down hill while burning. If it reaches the water burning, it is a good sign.

The yule log, ever since the old Scandinavian feasts in honor of the god Thor, is surrounded by many superstitions and Christmas fancies. While it burnt, enemies became friends; beside its blaze, old disputes were put aside forever, hatchets were buried to be dug up no more, and merriment and good feeling prevailed. The charred log was always saved from one year to another, and was thought to act as a charm in subduing storms and plagues. When the new yule log was brought in, all travelers and sojourners were respectful, and lifted their hats to it, and if a squinting person or any one barefooted came in while it was burning, it was regarded as a bad sign.

By Candlemas day it must be burnt out, and all greenery swept up, for, if not, a goblin, it was supposed, would appear for every stray leaf or twig, and a death in the family would follow. Folk-lore is full of many strange customs belonging to Christmas time that would take much space and time to relate. The most beautiful custom of all is the remembrance of friends by the distribution of little gifts at this season, if we except the burying of feuds and family disturbances, the uniting of friends in peace, love, and harmony, which takes precedence of all else belonging to the day.

The bringing of gifts comes more particularly from the Germans, who regarded St. Nicholas, or Santa Claus, as the patron saint of Christmas.

The significance of Christmas as a religious holiday is not generally observed, except by the Catholics and Episcopalians, and not with reason by them, since it does not betoken the real birthday of Christ, but is, as stated in the beginning of this article, of Pagan origin, and of a very ancient period. As a holiday (we hav none too many of them) and a gift-day, a term we like better than Christmas, it is of value and beauty, wherein friends are remembered and friendships strengthened and cemented, not by costly presents always, but by little tender mementoes and offerings, sometimes by only a word or smile, testifying truly to love and good-will. S. H. W.

Roger.

My name is Roger. I am a cat.

Being connected with a literary family, a member of the same has kindly consented to act as my amanuensis while I relate some incidents of my history.

I am just as black as jet in color, and am of fine physique for a cat, large and handsome.

When quite a youth I ran away from my home, being of a roving disposition and having a strong desire to see a little of the world. I wandered along the highway, scampering and capering, until, feeling weary and hungry, I approached a modest, unpretentious dwelling and boldly walked up to the back-door.

"Me-ow! Me-ow!" said I.

A lady opened the door and looked at me. "What a pretty kitten!" said she.

"I've heard that remark before," I said mentally, as I hopped into the kitchen, singing softly and rubbing myself against her dress.

"Me-ow!" I exclaimed. "I want something to eat."

What did she do but go right away and bring me a saucer full of rich new milk, which I ate greedily, for I was very hungry. After finishing the milk and washing my face, I looked about the room, and as everything seemed neat and comfortable, I partially made up my mind to remain there, especially as the family seemed to admire me, and rather coaxed me to stay.

"It's a tramp cat," said one of the ladies. "You'd better let it go. We hav already one cat, and we don't want another."

"Oh, but she is so cunning—just look at her!" said the other.

I was curled up there in a chair, but I was only feigning sleep, and I heard every word that was said.

In the course of an hour, if you will believe it, the one who called me a tramp opened the door when no one was looking, and turned me out in the street. Yes, she did, and after wandering around a while I returned to my home.

I suppose you think I remained there. I did not. I didn't like my folks, and in a day or two, back I went to the modest, unpretentious cottage.

"Meow! Let me in!" said I.

"Oh, here is that lovely black kitten again!" said the younger of the two ladies.

"Now, you're not a-going to keep that cat, I tell you," exclaimed the other lady rather sharply.

"I know who'll keep it, and be glad to," said the first, and picking me up, after putting on her hat and shawl she wrapped me in the shawl and started with me down the street.

"O Lord!" I screamed, softly, "I hope she isn't going to drown me!"

My heart beat violently as we turned a corner and she ran up the steps of a comfortable-appearing house, and was met at the door by the sweetest-faced little girl I had ever seen.

"I've brought you a present," she said to the little girl.

"Is it a libe [live] one?" inquired the child.

For answer she let me drop, and the little girl, whose name was Susie, took me up and laughed and patted me tenderly. Not to multiply words, here I found a royal welcome, and made up my mind to stay as long as I lived. I returned to my old home once, however, but was so terribly insulted and maltreated that I escaped and hastened to my little mistress as fast as my legs would carry me. It was she who gave me the name of Roger.

Oh, such jolly times as little Susie and I had, playing on the big rock, and in the yard! I followed her everywhere, and she used to talk to me as if I were a human being. She would put me in her doll's cradle and rock me to sleep, and play I was a little "nigger baby," only she never said that, but said "a small colored child." She let her canary out one day, and I foolishly caught it, hurting it so that it died. I was so sorry, and afterward I caught a bluebird and carried it as a peace-offering in the house, but it could not liv in a cage, and that died also.

I became greatly attached to little Susie, she was so good to me, and when she was taken sick it seemed as if my heart would break, for I felt she would never be well again. I could not play nor go out all during her illness, and when I heard them say she was dead, nobody can know how grieved and lonely I became. The world seemed like one deep grave in which all my love and hope were buried. Not to dwell upon this painful part of my experience, I will say that I was so lonely that I began to be dissipated. I would go off to cat concerts and cat theaters, frequently being away all night long. In the day-time I followed the steps of little Susie's mamma. When she took a walk, I walked along beside or behind her. The neighbors all know me, and would say as often as they saw us walking together: "It is little Susie's cat. She misses the child." And so I did, and do still. Things went on smoothly until last spring, when I took it into my head that I would like some fresh chicken. I hav been borrowed to catch mice and rats, but I don't fancy that kind of meat. And although the butcher is very thoughtful and brings me beefsteak daily because he promised little Susie he would see to me, and he always will, yet I am fond of chicken, and it was such fun to nab Neighbor D.'s little chicks! And I didn't think it any harm, but he did, however. He made an awful fuss, and said if they—my folks—did not take care of me he should kill me; that he would hav killed me before, only he knew the circumstances of my life, and that I had been a pet of little Susie. My folks concluded to take me with them to the seaside in order to save my life, and I was placed in a box and put aboard the cars one warm day in June, and started for Onset, and there I had a most delightful time. I roamed at will in the woods and on the shore. I caught birds, squirrels, and tree toads; chased the fiddlers on the beach and purred over clams and razor-fish. Everybody noticed me, and "Uncle John Garside" and "Aunt Sue" were very kind. So were the Howards, Mrs. Britnall, and Dr. Brigham's people. I lived on the fat of the land. Nothing occurred to vex me, except that Bonnie, the lady's dog who is acting as my scribe—not the dog, but the lady—was forever teasing me. I hate that dog, he is such a little spitfire, but Tommy, our own dog, I like.

Well, we had to leave the "summer land" at last, and returnd to our city home. I had had such good living that I was as fat as an alderman. I frolicked about, and ran over to Neighbor D.'s one morning to see if there was anything in his hen-yard fit for a cat like me to eat. But the chickens had turned into old hens and very proud roosters. But one day I chanced to go past Mr. R.'s lot, and oh! my gracious! there was a whole yard full of half grown chickens. Said I to them:

"Let's play high spry!"

They were proud and wouldn't play, and, just to show my agility, I jumped and grabbed one. "Squawk! Squawk!" and that chicken was no more forever.

Oh, if the chicken's owner didn't rage when he found what I had done!

He said he would shoot me, and what do you suppose my mistress did then? She locked me in the cellar, where I was kept a prisoner till I thought die I should. One rainy, windy night the cellar window fell down, and I made a flying leap for liberty, and landed on terra firma. Oh, how nice it was to be free once more! But next day I was again imprisoned, and kept so until they thought the chickens had outgrown me. But I caught them all the same. I knew it was wrong, but it was such fun to leap on them unawares, and see them wiggle. I don't know how many I caught the last time, but Mr. R. said, in all, I had killed twenty pounds of chicken! I think he stretched it a little, for he has been in business, and knows the tricks of trade.

"Why," said he, "I never saw such a cat! She must be of the wildcat species! I believe she'd catch old hens!"

He! he! he! I laughed, and licked my paws. He was just as mad as he could be. He caught me—it was on Sunday—and thrust me ignominiously into a wash boiler, and clapped the cover on. Oh, I was so mortified at the insult! He took me in the boiler, I grumbling and growling, to my home, and told what I had done, and said that if the practice was continued he would surely put me out of the way. My mistress cried, and then he relented and said he would not kill me, but she must keep me at home. I was again imprisoned, but allowed the liberty of the kitchen. One day I discovered a wing that my mistress used to dust off the stove.

"Ah ha!" said I. "Now for a little sport. I'll play this is a chicken!" and then I went for it with an awful howl. I tore it with my teeth, and, while I was playing with it, my mistress stepped behind me and hit me a awful lick with a long horsewhip, and it hurt, too, I tell you. This she repeated whenever I touched that wing, until, when the wing was shown to me, I would run for life. This set them to thinking, and, as a result of thought and discussion, my master one day took me in the same box in which I went to Onset, and I thought we were off for another excursion. I was in high glee, but, alas! he went no farther than Mr. R.'s hen-yard, when he and Mr. R. talked together awhile. One brought the carcase of a chicken which I had destroyed, and showed it to me. I quaked with fear while they pinioned me, and then beat me with that dreadful horsewhip.

"Oh, how my back tingled with pain and and shame! I got away as soon as I could, and ran to little Susie's grandmother's and hid in the shrubbery. The memory of that day will remain with me as long as I liv. Such names as they called me—old Grimalkin, Roger Dynamite, Roger Rackarock, and other names too dreadful to speak; even was I called a witch cat!

They say, however, that they hav broken me up of killing chickens. Perhaps they hav, but they can never know the indignation of my heart at the treatment I hav undergone. My proud spirit is crushed, my lofty ambition humbled. I hav my liberty now, but am told I must not abuse it, and I shall always hav it. I feel humiliated, and sometimes it seems that I shall go mad with grief at the indignities that hav been heaped upon me. I am not subject to fits, but no one would wonder if I should hav a fit under the circumstances, and become a raving maniac. Whether I shall die in my shame and despair or liv out my nine lives, I know not, but in any case I leave with you this brief sketch of my history and sorrows, saying this only: Don't meddle with other people's belongings; if you do you will surely come to grief, as I did. ROGER.

N.B—The last thing I hav done is worth recording. My folks bought a dozen eggs the other day. I stealthily crept into the pantry and was looking around on the second shelf, and, in squeezing behind the egg-dish, all at once it went smash, crash on the floor, and every egg was broken.

My mistress threatened to break my neck.

"It's too much," said she, "eggs forty cents a dozen, and just before Christmas, too! You mean old black D—utchman!"

I would giv worlds to restore those eggs, but they are gone forever. The Lord only knows what I shall do next. It seems as if I was possessed. R.

Our Puzzle Box.

CHRISTMAS PRIZE PUZZLE.

Dedicated to the Young Folks.

DOUBLE DIAMOND.

Ye sifters, all come forth and try
The answer to this puzzle tell,
When, sifting it, you will espy
It reads adown, and across as well.

Across.

1. A letter of the alphabet
Near K, L, M, N, and O;
2. A nickname for the next you get;
You are correct, now don't be slow,
3. An ancient prince in Bible named—
His reign was not the best.

4. A plant for this, I hav framed,
Now don't leave off and rest,
5. But go ahead, a male name find,
One which perhaps you own;
6. A female nickname this brings to mind
And now I am nearly done,
7. One letter more, 'tis found in known
And now one-half you hav won.

Down.

1. Again a letter of the alphabet take,
One, perhaps you know ere this;
2. A verb is next; now don't mistake,
But write it vis-a-vis.
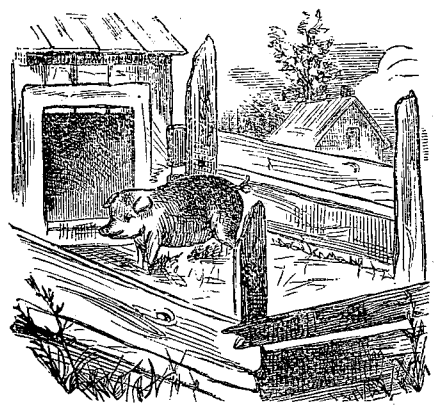
3. A singing bird for this you note,
'Tis found in France, also in Spain;
4. A town in Turkey for this I quote,
Now don't forget but write it plain;
5. A kind of armor here is seen,
'Twas used in times of old;
6. A male nickname is this I ween
Which write in letters large and bold;
7. A letter now, and then adieu;
To solve it out I leave to you.

Prize: To each and every one of the first six correct solutions received, I will send a copy "Puzzledom in a Nutshell." Send answers to Miss S. H. Wixon, editor of Children's Corner.

Pittsburgh, Pa. H. E. JUERGENS.

2.—MATHEMATICAL.



If a man walk nine miles south, and then go directly west until he is twice as far from his starting point as the distance he has gone west, how far has he traveled?

3.—NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of thirty-two letters, and form a very old saying.
My 19, 10, 6, is a forest tree.
My 15, 26, 21, 28, 18, 16, 4, 5, is tough.
My 29, 30, 31, 12, 13, 8, 22, 32, 13, 17, 25, is a bird.
My 14, 3, 9, 11, is a fish.
My 20, 24, 7, 2, 1, 27, is an untidy person.
My 23 is a vowel. G. W. WILLIAMS.

Aledo, O.

4.—CONUNDRUM.

What useful thing always found in a grocery store may be seen in this picture.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, DEC. 12, 1885.

1.—Washington Irving. 2.—Chattanooga. 3.—Cat-tar (catarrh). 4.—

F
HEN FENCE
ACE
E

Solvers: H. E. Juergens, Bertha La Fever, Wm. S. Galloway, G. W. Williams, Edward Bambach.

RUTH BRINEGAR—Try again.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN!

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS;

A STORY OF THE RIGHTWAY ALMSHOUSE.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE

Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"APPLES OF GOLD."

A story-book for the young folks. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellen work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles

Price 20 cents.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Price, $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and the Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

PRICE, $1.25.

THE STORY HOUR.

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

BY SUSAN H. WIXON.

Author of APPLES OF GOLD, ALL IN A LIFETIME, Etc.

WITH NEARLY ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS.

"Between the dark and the daylight, when the night begins to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations that is known as the children's hour."
LONGFELLOW.

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED BY THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
22 CLINTON PLACE.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
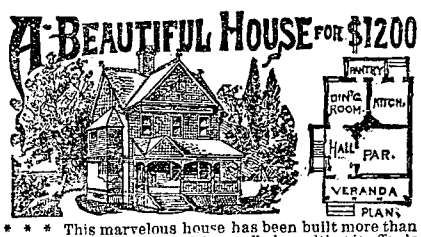
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

Freethinkers will find this, for an outline history, the best for their use, as Professor Cottinger is a Freethinker, and in his reports of the church's actions has stated facts with a truthful freedom not found in ordinary histories. He dates his work from the beginning of historical certainty and not from the mythical Eden, as do most "universal" historians, and brings it down to 1883, with a brief mention of subsequent important inventions and discoveries.



TESTIMONIALS:

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nut-shell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, with Sixty-seven Engravings, Preface, and Notes.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.
Zadig; or, Fate.
The Sage and the Atheist.
The Princess of Babylon.
The Man of Forty Crowns.
The Huron; or, The Pupil of Nature.
Micromegas.
The World as it Goes.
The Black and the White.
Memnom the Philosopher.
Andres Des Touches at Siam.
The Study of Nature.
A Conversation With a Chinese.
Plato's Dream.
A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.
An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, 4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
ILLINOIS.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street., and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.
KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.
MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).
MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.
NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.
NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
OHIO
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street., and Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior street, Cleveland.
OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
A. Erwin, Lebanon.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
PENNSYLVANIA.
George Longford, 25 Otter st., Philadelphia.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 505 1-2 North 8th st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.
UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Brentano Bros.
ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it. The German-American thus describes it in detail:

The palmy days of the church witness the burning at the stake of Bruno, the pope and priests witnessing the burning of the heretic with expressions of joy. Galileo is represented sitting in his study the pope holding the sword of inquisition over his head, and to save his life being forced to recant his philosophy. Martin Luther is represented tacking up his "Right of Private Judgment." Behind him stands the pope with the bull of excommunication drawn, and beside him the headsman's block and ax of infallibility. In their study are Morse and Stephenson applying their inventions to practical tests, and in the rear of them the Presbyterian pulpits are filled by two of the broadcloth gentlemen denouncing the inventions as "Thwarting the will of God," and branding these men and their inventions as "Heralds of Antichrist." Ingersoll stands on a platform apparently delivering his lecture "Which Way?" which he holds in his hand. Talmage approaches the platform at the colonel's back, pulling after him, by the arm, the chief of police, who holds in his hand the warrant of arrest for blasphemy. The colonel seems to take no notice of the spleeny, cadaverous form ascending the platform at his rear. Then come the modern teachers of salvation, the Salvation Army, with their drums, bones, tambourines, and streamers, (and screamers, too), also a fac simile of our crazy army. A group of likenesses of the teachers of science, Haeckel, Humboldt, Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, is also shown. The likenesses throughout are remarkably correct. As a pictorial history the caricatures contain volumes.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science
And the Common Computations.
An Almanac Forever.

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

Book Notices.

IDEOLOGY: Mental Anesthesia Self-Induced, Miraculous Cures Self-made; Involution and Evolution in the Human Mind as in the Whole of Things. By Dr. LaRoy Sunderland, Foundation Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature, and Art, London. Boston: J. P. Mendum. Price, $1.50.

In this large and handsome work of about two hundred pages, the author has stated, in a somewhat roundabout way, perhaps, his explanation of those psychological phenomena which pass under the names of mesmerism, magnetism, "hypnotism," and so forth. With these are included the manifestations called trance, inspiration, and those crazy freaks which, breaking out at revivals and camp-meetings, are attributed to the moving of the "spirit." All these he believes to be self-induced.

There is no question that the author of this work, the late Dr. Sunderland, was possessed of a marvelous and mysterious power over those upon whom he chose to exert his influence. At his volition, and apparently without volition of their own, subjects became insensible to pain, or felt pain where none existed. They were deaf to all actual sound, or heard that which was beyond their hearing; they became blind to actual objects within the range of ordinary vision, or with closed eyes perceived concealed objects; they were dumb so far as concerned the uttering of their own thoughts, or spoke whatever he willed that they should say. Those who at a distance held views diametrically opposit to his own, in his presence became at one with him. A Methodist minister, he broke through the Disciplin, preached heretical sermons, and was arraigned for trial. He conducted his own defense, and although prosecuted by the ablest men in the church, no jury could be found to convict him, and he was in every case triumphantly acquitted. His prosecutors were all the bishops, the New York Conference, Bishop Soule, Bishop Hedding, Nathan Bangs, and Francis Hodgson. As the Christian Advocate admits, it is remarkable that he was not crushed, though innocent; if guilty, amazing.

Under the first sermon Mr. Sunderland ever preached the entire congregation fell upon the floor entranced. He then thought that it was the "power of God." Investigating the subject, he found that with the power of God left out of the question the same results were obtained. He thereupon concluded that conversion was a mere psychological phenomenon, with no supernatural power about it. This was the occasion of his leaving the church. There was not power enough in it to expel him, but the strength of his own reason forced the conviction upon him that all religions were alike and that all religion was superstition.

Mr. Sunderland has left this book (printed since his death) as a record of the phenomena which he witnessed or produced. Though writing to explain how the different psychological states are induced, he falls short of doing so. However vividly he may describe the scenes he has beheld, he does not tell what produced them, nor why, if they were "self-induced," his presence aud influence had anything to do with bringing them about. He omits to say how a subject may either be mesmerized or mesmerize himself. The reason probably is that he did not know.

Every person who is not paralyzed is given the power to control his own motion and speech. LaRoy Sunderland was given the power to control the motion and speech of others. And yet one gift is no more mysterious than the other. When some person can explain how he raises his hand above his head, the mesmerist may explain his ability to make a subject do the same.

Therefore, if Mr. Sunderland has not given us all the information we might desire, he has given us all we could reasonably expect. The things related in this book are doubtless true; most of them are attested to by numerous witnesses. The power of delusion, which he treats of to some extent, may be observed every day in imaginary cures of imaginary diseases, as by the influence of prayer; but outside of this there is a range of phenomena which do not so readily yield to explanation.

As a relic of a singular man with marvelous gifts, this book is a valuable one. Many useful hints are given, and much mystery is cleared up. It brings the reader back from his star-gazing with Andrew Jackson Davis and other visionaries to what really exists all around, to which we must look for the cause of many manifestations believed to be spiritual. It will not be kindly received by revivalists and other humbugs, because frauds do not like to be exposed, but all who honestly desire to know the truth about the subjects it treats of will find in it a great contribution to their knowledge.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS, and Other Lectures. By Helen H. Gardener, with an Introduction by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place.

In old times it was customary to say of a young man just setting out into the world to make his fortune that if he had a good "presence" it was equal to a letter of recommendation. For there is something in self-respecting looks and a pleasing manner which opens the way and furnishes an inducement to seek further acquaintance with their possessor.

The same may be said of a new book. If the printers and bookbinders hav done their duty it is clothed with an attractivness which modestly invites one to open its pages and see if it be not worth reading. This service has been rendered by the publishers to Miss Helen H. Gardener's volume, now on sale, entitled, "Men, Women, and Gods," with an introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. We hav read it over very carefully, and do not remember being disgusted with a single typographical error in the whole book of 158 pages.

Taken as a whole, this volume is a plea and a protest; a plea, and a very powerful one, for the natural rights of woman, in contradistinction to those few privileges graciously accorded to her during the last eighteen hundred years by the church and the state; and a protest against the public sentiment of the world which still constitutes woman a subject class in society. It abounds in good solid argument; and nearly every page glitters with scintillations of wit, all at the expense of the old superstition which has so long reigned supreme in the world of thought. It might be expected that a woman who has intelligence enough to know, and self-respect enough to feel, the injury inflicted upon her sex, would express her indignation at the wrong in all rhetorical ways. In this book Helen Gardener has done so. She proves herself to be, not only an able attorney for her sex, but a brave one too; for she does not throw away an effectiv weapon in the fight because, forsooth, it may be an unpleasant one to handle. She is in dead earnest in the work she has undertaken, and her faithfulness and courage must command the respect of all men, and all intelligent women. There are two theories concerning the proper place of woman in society. The first is the European, or Old World, and the second is the American, or New World, theory. The whole subject comes under the law of progress, and the one theory is but an evolution from the other. The first takes the ground that the male creature Man—not the "homo," but the "vir"—stands at the head of our sublunary creation, and is invested by his creator with supreme authority over all the other inhabitants of the planet, in the air, on the earth, and in the sea; that as woman's sex dominates and absorbs every other feature of her character, her sole function is, in the capacity of wife, to furnish him an object of conjugal affection, and in the capacity of mother, to provide for him objects on which his paternal affections can be placed, thus complementing his character as a man, and hers as a woman. This theory claims that a woman is an article of property, a daughter being owned by her father, and when sold, or given away, in marriage, becoming the property of her husband, the very ring on her finger being placed there as a token of his ownership; that, her brain being smaller, and her person weaker, than a man's, she is incapable of standing alone, but, like a vine, can only fulfil her destiny when the tendrils of her nature twine round a a husband for support; that, being the mere appurtenance, or complement, to the man, her name and individuality are so merged in his that the debts she incurs are deemed his debts, and he, and not she, is legally responsible, in many respects, for her conduct. That this was the legal and social status of woman for ages in England is clear from what Petruchio, in "The Taming of the Shrew," says of his wife Kate, that:

"She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household stuff, my field, my barn,
My horse, my ox, my ass, my anything;
. . . Touch her whoever dare."

This cruel discrimination against woman by legal statutes, and the common law, or customs of society, all grew out of the charge brought against her in the Bible that, under the incantation and magic of the devil, appearing in the garden of Eden in the form of a speaking serpent, she took the forbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge, gave it to her innocent, but easily tempted, husband, and thus introduced death into the world, and all the woe that men and animals hav ever since endured.

Although every school-boy now knows that this is a sheer myth, because geology proves that death was in the world millions of years before the imaginary Adam and Eve are said to hav been created, it has had the terrible effect of putting dishonor and privation upon the female sex for centuries of years. It makes a man's blood boil in his veins, if he ever had a woman for a mother, to read, first, what Paul (who had vastly more to do in giving character to Christiauity than Jesus had) teaches; and then what the ascetics in the early ages of the church taught; and then what governments, under such teaching, hav done in regard to woman. According to the "inspired" apostle, marriage is only a legal and prudential safety-valve against the evils of indiscriminate unchastity; and a man, in contemplating his origin, cannot feel pleased, as he ought to feel, that he was the product of the mutual love of his parents, and sent for to come into this beautiful world and enjoy a residence here, but that he is the child of a legalized whoredom that grieved his mother when he was born. Kept in profound ignorance for centuries; compelled to hear the vituperation of hypocritical priests and monks, generation after generation, that she was under the clinging curse of God and man for having introduced death and damnation into the world, it is no wonder that in her conscious weakness she should hav succumbed to her fate, and that the bitter and debasing effect of her ancestral experiences should, by the laws of heredity, become organized in her sex, and be transmitted to her female offspring as we see it to-day. For the wonderful anomaly is before our eyes that the church, which uttered this foul libel against women, and had the state embody it in its laws of cruel discrimination for long centuries, finds its mainstay in the zealous support of women. Every other living thing, except Spaniel dogs, resents injury to the extent of its power. But church women, instead of hating the very letters which spell the word, are now, and always hav been, the chief support of that iniquitous corporation. In this age of free discussion, and consequently of enlightenment, the church buildings of this country would be forsaken before the close of the century, and become the roosting-places of owls and bats which hate the light; or else be converted into halls of science for the instruction of the people, and their growth in the adornments of a true civilization. But it is the women of the church who, in upholding that organization, seem to rejoice in the cause of their degradation, and kiss the hand that smites them to the earth.

The churchlings of the press claim that every blessing the world enjoys is the gift of Christianity, and hav charged Helen Gardener, and the large class of intelligent and good women she represents, with base ingratitude in the course of opposition they pursue toward the church and its religion. But if they would read the appendix to her book, in which is a storehouse of undisputed facts, all bearing on the religious and legal status of women, during the present, as well as past ages, their reproofs would be changed into expressions of wonder that every woman on earth, on learning the facts of the case, does not hate and scorn the church as her bitterest enemy. The only apology we can make for this anomaly is, that women, generally, are entirely ignorant of history, and the teachings of the Bible bearing on this subject, and the absorbing character of that blind devotionalism which they call their religion. They are mere chips floating on the current, and carried whither it will. They hav no positivness of character. They hav no convictions which are the result of reading and thought, and, therefore, are easy subjects for the manipulation of the priesthood.

The American, or New World, theory of woman's place in society, and the one advocated by Helen Gardener, is that, in respect of natural rights, she is the equal of men. The fathers of this republic, in the immortal act which separated the thirteen colonies from the British crown, declared that "all men are created equal." Had they spoken in the Latin tongue, the word men would hav been expressed by the term "Homines," which is a generic term, and means mankind, as distinguished from all other kinds, or races of animals. They declared, over and over again, that it was the rights of human nature they wished to secure by the Revolution they inaugurated. And when they succeeded, they invited the oppressed of all nations to come to our shores and enjoy homes of their own under a flag whose staff was planted on the eternal, self-evident truths of the Declaration. But alas! they had not the courage of the mighty principle for which they fought. For, while the Declaration is a part of our Constitutional laws, and furnishes the foundation principles on which all legislation by Congress and the state legislatures should proceed, they virtually expunged the word "homines," and substituted the sex word "viri," thus making the government, first, a white man's government, and then adopting the Pauline and European idea, that woman had no political, and few other rights, which men—viri—were bound to respect.

But our fathers, after all, were not hypocrits. The pledge which, in the day of their trouble, they honestly gave, and embodied in the Declaration, was meant to be redeemed. And leaden-heeled Justice, with the relentlessness of fate, overtook their sons, and compelled them to redeem it, as they fully did, on the first day of January, 1863, by President Lincoln's signature to the Act of Emancipation, which, in an instant of time, converted four millions of chattel slaves into freemen, and members of the body politic. Ours is, therefore, no longer a white man's government. It took thirty long years of agitation to bring about the partial redemption of this pledge; and the success of the effort is the only encouragement we hav in believing that day will yet come when the principle of the pledge will be applied to woman, as well as negro slaves, and when the administration of the government will proceed upon the generic word "homines," instead of the sex word "viri."

The latter half of the nineteenth century has brought more hope for the elevation of woman than all the other generations of the past. The Bible myth of her origin, and her unpardonable sin in introducing natural and moral death into the world of men and animals, is fast being laughed at, thanks to the skeptical spirit of the age which demands proof for every proposition it is asked to believe. The government of the United States, while it forbids women to cast a vote, most inconsistently to be sure, employs them in responsible positions in the treasury and other departments. Men hav defaulted to the government to the amount of millions, but no woman in the public service has ever been known to plunder the government of a dollar. The "Homines" principle of the Declaration has been recognized by all the states in the Union in the matter of education, and no discrimination has been made against the female sex in any civil institution supported by the taxation of the people. Only the old monkish institutions called colleges, inheriting the prejudice of the Dark Ages, continue to insult woman by shutting their doors against her as a student, as if she were incapable of high culture, or would contaminate her brothers by her presence and bad influence. The nineteenth century has individualized woman. She is no longer a mere complement, or appendage, necessary to the rounding out and symmetry of the male character. She evinces a laudable ambition to make practical use of the education which the state has given her, in supporting herself. Hundreds of women are practicing physicians, and colleges are built for their education as such. Thousands make a comfortable living as teachers in the public schools, and prove themselvs to be peculiarly adapted to the work. Hundreds, especially in the West, hold land in their own names, and conduct the cultivation of it to their own profit. Thousands of others occupy positions of trust, as clerks in stores, and other vocations in life, and enjoy a personal independence which the women of antiquity never dreamed of as possible.

Some men—viri—affect to be, and probably are, afraid that this spirit of independence will harden the character of woman, and deprive her of that delicacy and helplessness which appeal so powerfully to the generosity of man for protection and support. It is feared she will become coarse and mannish, ambitious for wealth, and lose her attractivness in the department of love, and thus marriage and the family institution be discouraged. It is true that her individuality of character and her spirit of independence, shown in standing upon her own feet and making a living for herself, will cease to make her a drug in the matrimonial market, and that she will no longer be tempted to marry, as thousands hav done, merely to get a home and support, or to avoid the disgrace which fools of both sexes attach to an uncourted spinster. But she will never cease to be a woman, and lose the womanly virtues which constitute her charm. She will only subordinate the woman to the human, the special to the general. She will be prudent and quit the custom of her sex, in throwing themselvs into poverty and misery by an unwise love.

And the reflex influence of her character will be seen in making men giv up their vices and cultivate their manly traits, so that they may become worthy to be the husbands of such women. The charms of good, intellectual, and practical women of positiv character never fade. They inspire platonic love in in their admirers which lasts, and even increases, when personal charms are gone. Such love is the only safe basis of a true marriage, if it ever take place; a marriage which neve dreams of divorce, but which makes home and the family a heaven of happy souls. To attain such grand results in all their plenitude is, if we understand the author, the noble design of Helen Gardener's book. A. B. B.

Enon Valley, Pa.

The Christian church was the bulwark of African slavery in America. So LaRoy Sunderland found it, so Parker Pillsbury found it, so it is, and so it will continue to be. Parker Pillsbury has just issued a pamphlet entitled "The Church as It Is; or, The Forlorn Hope of Slavery." In this he shows that the church defended slavery while it existed, never opposed it until it had been abolished, and would uphold and assist an attempt to establish it again. This pamphlet is the third edition of the work, the first having been published nearly forty years ago. It appears that slavery was in those days regarded as a divine institution, and about those who criticised it it was said, as it is now said of Freethinkers, that they attacked all that had hitherto been considered sacred. If the theologians of those days were right, there is reason to suspect that God has damned many an honest man for not believing in slavery. The statements made in this book would almost surpass belief if they did not accord so well with the history of the church for all time. The price of this pamphlet is 25 cents.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.00 In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25 Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cts.; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22 x 28, $5; panel, 10 1-2x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cts.; card, 20 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for $1, or either one for 25 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitely fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

Sent on receipt of price,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SABBATH-BREAKING.

BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

AUTHOR OF "LIFE OF PAINE," "FALSE CLAIMS," "BIBLE MORALS," ETC.

This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view.

LARGE AND HANDSOME PRINT.

The question is discussed under the following heads:

Origin of the Sabbatic Idea—The Jewish Sabbath—The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath—Examination of Sunday Arguments—Origin of Christian Sabbath—Testimony of the Christian Fathers—The Sabbath during the Middle Ages—The Puritan Sabbath—Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines—Abrogation of Sunday Laws.

Price, 25 Cents; Six Copies, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

In connection with another firm we have just published Helen H. Gardener's first volume. Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and
Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

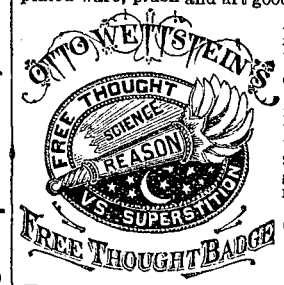
CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

BIBLE MORALS.

TWENTY CRIMES AND VICES SANCTIONED BY SCRIPTURE.

Falsehood and Deception—Cheating—Theft and Robbery—Adulterv and Prostitution—Murder—Wars of Conquest and Extermination—Despotism—Intolerance and Persecution—Injustice to Woman—Unkindness to Children—Cruelty to Animals—Human Sacrifices—Cannibalism—Witchcraft—Slavery—Polygamy—Intemperance—Poverty and Vagrancy—Ignorance and Idiocy—Obscenity.



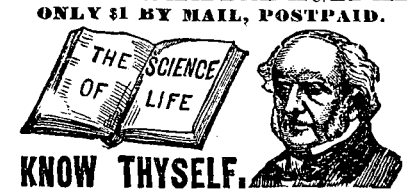
BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents; - - - - 6 Copies, $1.00

Special Discount on Larger Quantities.

Holiday Goods!

All my Liberal friends are reminded that if they will kindly favor me with their orders for holiday gifts I will guarantee to undersell any other firm or cheerfully refund cash upon return of goods. My stock embraces all that is elegant, rich, and new in the market, as well as a full line of good medium-grade goods, viz., genuin diamond rings, pins, ear-drops, studds, collar buttons, elegant diamond-set watches, gold and silver watches of every grade, chains, bracelets, gold and best gold-plated jewelry, gold pens, gold and silver headed canes, opera glasses, gold spectacles, solid silver and plated ware, plush and art goods, etc., etc.



And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3 50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

A STANDARD MEDICAL WORK
For YOUNG & MIDDLE-AGED MEN
ONLY $1 BY MAIL, POSTPAID.

KNOW THYSELF.

A Great Medical Work on Manhood

Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in Man, Errors of Youth, and the untold miseries resulting from indiscretion or excesses. A book for every man, young, middle-aged and old. It contains 125 prescriptions for all acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable. So found by the author, whose experience for 23 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. 300 pages, bound in beautiful French muslin, embossed covers, full gilt, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, and professional—than any other work sold in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance Price only $1.00 by mail, post paid. Illustrativ sample 6 cents. Send now. Gold medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association, to the president of which, the Hon. P. A. Bissell, and associate officers of the Board the reader is respectfully referred.

The Science of Life should be read by the young for instruction, and by the afflicted for relief. It will benefit all.—London Lancet.

There is no member of society to whom The Science of Life will not be useful, whether youth, parent, guardian, instructor, or clergyman.—Argonaut.

Address the Peabody Medical Institute, or Dr. W. H. Parker, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., who may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. Chronic and obstinate diseases that have baffled the skill of all other physicians a specialty. Such treated successfully, without an instance of failure. Mention this paper. 1y14

HEAL THYSELF

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get-up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicine to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

From the Ironclad Age.

"Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Infidel, therefore no cheat or humbug. The Freethinkers of the land should giv the doctor their patronage." 1y3

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An easy and practical new method, adapted for self-instruction as well as for use in schools. To consist of about twelve numbers. Eleven numbers now published. Sent to any address on receipt of the price, 10 cents per number, by THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

"These books contain a wealth of knowledge for self-instruction."—ED. Albany Union.

3tf

BIBLICAL ANTHOLOGY

A Collection of Passages

Illustrating the

Purity and Morality of The Bible.

Price, paper, 35 cents; flexible cloth, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Gems of Thought.

ONE cannot tell what he may be compelled to do when he comes to God's country.—D. M. Bennett.

MAY I reach
That purest heaven, be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that hav no cruelty—

Be the sweet presence of a good diffused,
And in diffusion ever more intense.
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world.
—George Eliot.

THE Old Testament is full of revenge and cruelty; its spirit is "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." Jehovah himself sets the example by commanding the destruction of whole nations—even the new-born infant on its mother's breast, and the mother, too—in one indiscriminate mass. Did these commands come from the same spirit that uttered the words, "Father, forgiv them, for they know not what they do?"—Truth Seeker Tract, No. 133.

WE are exhorted to throw aside these doubts and believe those necessary truths of which no two philosophers ever succeeded in giving the same version. But, until your divine revelations hav something more to reveal, we shall be content to admit openly, what you whisper under your breath or hide in technical jargon, that the secret is a secret still; that man knows nothing of the Infinit and the Absolute; and that, knowing nothing, he had better not be dogmatic about his ignorance.—Leslie Stephen.

CONSIDERING all the heresies, the enormous crimes, the wickedness, the astounding follies, which the Bible has been made to justify, and which its indiscriminate reading has suggested; considering that it has been, indeed, the sword which our Lord said he was sending, and that not the devil himself could hav invented an implement more potent to fill the hated world with lies and blood and fury, I think, certainly, that to send hawkers over the world loaded with copies of this book, scattering it in all places, among all persons, . . . is the most culpable folly of which it is possible for man to be guilty.—Froude's Nemesis.

IT is universally acknowledged that there is a great uniformity among the actions of men, in all ages and in all nations; and that human nature remains still the same in its principles and operations. The same motivs always produce the same actions: the same events follow the same causes. Ambition, avarice, self-love, vanity, friendship, generosity, public spirit: these passions, mixed in various degrees and distributed through society, hav been from the beginning of the world, and still are, the source of all the actions and enterprises which hav ever been observed among mankind. Would you know the sentiments, inclinations, and course of life of the Greeks and Romans? Study well the temper and actions of the French and English. You cannot be much mistaken in transferring to the former most of the observations which you hav made with regard to the latter. Mankind are so much the same, in all times and places, that history informs us of nothing new or strange in this particular. . . . Nor are the earth, water, and other elements examined by Aristotle and Hippocrates, more like to those which at present lie under our observation than the men described by Polybius and Tacitus are to those who now govern the world.—Hume's Liberty and Necessity.

THE problem of the marriage law is only to be solved by a compromise. It is necessary, on the one hand, to resist caprice and to uphold marriage, not only as a thing of sensuous desire or esthetic pleasure, but of natural will and moral duty. Especially must it be upheld on account of the children, whose existence or non-existence must materially modify the state of the case. But this must be done without, on the one hand, making it too difficult to unloose the heart, when prolonged experience and careful examination hav proved the impossibility of an advantageous union.—Strauss's Old and New Faith.

WIVES are young men's mistresses, companions for middle-age, and old men's nurses, so as a man may hav a general [pretext, excuse, or reason] to marry when he will; but yet, he was reputed one of the seven wise men of Greece that made answer to the question when a man should marry: A young man, not yet; an elder, not at all.—Bacon's Essays.

O WOMAN! in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
And variable as the shade
By the light quivering aspen made;
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou. —Scott.

SPEAKING for myself, I admit the possibility of revelation, but I totally disbelieve that the Almighty ever did communicate anything to man by any mode of speech, in any language, or by any kind of vision or appearance, or by any means which our senses are capable of receiving, otherwise than by the universal display of himself in the works of creation and by that repugnance which we feel in ourselvs to bad actions and the disposition to do good ones.—Paine's Age of Reason.

MORAL qualities are such as only a human being can possess. To attribute them to the spirit of the universe, or to suppose that it is capable of altering them, is to degrade God into man, and to annex to this inconprehensible Being qualities incompatible with any possible definition of his nature. . . . Persecution for opinion is unjust. With what consistency, then, can the worshipers of a deity, whose benevolence they boast, embitter the existence of their fellow-being because his ideas of that deity are different from those which they entertain? Alas! there is no consistency in those persecutors who worship a benevolent deity. Those who worship a demon would alone act consonantly to these principles by imprisoning and torturing in his name.—Shelley.

THINGS will hav their first and second agitation; and if they be not tossed upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tossed upon the waves of fortune, and be full of inconstancy, doing and undoing, like the reeling of a drunken man.—Bacon's Essays.

Standard and Classical Works.

Any of the following books will be sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address The Truth Seeker Co., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

LOCKHART'S SPANISH BALLADS AND SOUTHEY'S CHRONICLES OF THE CID. 75c.
LIFE AND REMAINS OF JNO. CLARE. 75c.
ROMANCE OF HISTORY—ENGLAND. 75c.
" " " —INDIA. 75c.
" " " —ITALY. 75c.
" " " —SPAIN. 75c.
BEAUTIES OF GERMAN LITERATURE, as shown by the works of Pichler, Zschokke, Richter, and Tieck. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF CHAS. MACKAY. 75c.
JOHNSON'S LIVES OF THE POETS. 75c.
LEGENDARY BALLADS OF ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF POPE, memoir. 50c.
" " " " portrait. 75c.
DANTE'S VISION OF HELL, PURGATORY, ETC. 12mo, g.e., gold stamp on side and b'k. $1.
LIVES OF EMINENT NOVELISTS AND DRAMATISTS. By Sir Walter Scott. 75c.
ESSAYS ON CHIVALRY, ROMANCE, AND DRAMA. By Sir Walter Scott. 75c.
EVERY-DAY BOOK OF MODERN LITERATURE. Short readings from best authors. 75c.
HOMER'S ODYSSEY. Trans. by Pope. 75c.
CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND. From Edw. I. to Henry VII. By Hallam. 75c.
CHILDREN OF THE ABBEY. 50c. With gold stamp on back. 85c.
PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. 12mo. gilt back. 75c.
VANITY FAIR. 12mo. Gold stamp on side and back. 75c.
ADDISON'S SPECTATOR. Satirical, moral, critical, etc. Gilt back. 75c.
SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 75c,
LORENTO'S AMATEUR AMUSEMENTS. Gilt stamp on back and sides. 75c.
ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES. Illus. Gold stamp on back and side. 85c.
FANCY'S FROLICS, OR XMAS STORIES. Farley. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
100 YEARS OF A NATION'S LIFE. With addresses of Washington and Jackson. Lives of all the presidents. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
TALES FROM SHAKSPERE. By Lamb. Illus. Gold stamp on back and side. $1.
THE SKETCH-BOOK. By Washington Irving. Gold stamp on back and side. 85c.
OUR RED-COATS AND BLUE-JACKETS. War Pictures by Land and Sea. Illus. 75c.
OLIVER TWIST. By Charles Dickens. Illus. Gold stamp on back and sides. 75c.
SCOTTISH CHIEFS. By Jane Porter. Illus. 85c.
NAPOLEON AND HIS CAMPAIGNS. Graphic account of his armies and generals. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
WILLY REILLY AND HIS COLLEEN BAWN. Gold stamp on back and side. 85c.
POETICAL WORKS OF JEAN INGELOW. Gilt edge, stamp on back and side. $1.
ADV. OF GIL BLAS. Smollett. 58 illus., gold stamp on back and side. $1.25.
SHAKSPERE WITH MEMOIR. Gold stamp on back, 75c.
SHAKSPERE. Illus., gold stamp on back. Bds. leather back. $2.25.
SHAKSPERE'S SONNETS. By Gerald Massey. 12mo, 603p. $3.
COMPLETE DRAMATIC AND POETICAL WORKS OF SHAKSPERE. With summary outline of life of poet. Port. sheep. 8vo, marbled edges. $4.75.
SHAKSPERE (13 vols. in case). 16mo, clo., $5.
HISTORY OF THE MEXICAN WAR. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
PROSE WRITERS OF AMERICA. Cheever. 75c
KINGSLEY'S NOVELS:
RAVENSHOE. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HILLYARS AND THE BURTONS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
GEOFFREY HAMLYN. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
AUSTIN ELLIOT. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
MILTON'S PROSE WORKS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
PARIS WITH PEN AND PENCIL. Bartlett. Gold stamp on back, 75c.
GEO. HERBERT'S PROSE AND POETICAL WORKS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
POPE'S POETICAL WORKS. Gilt edge. Gold back and side. $1.
SCHILLER'S POETICAL WORKS. With port. Gold stamp on back. 75c. Gilt edge, gilt stamp back and side. $1.
BRITISH FEMALE POETS. With biographical and critical notices. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF DRYDEN. Memoir. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HISTORY OF DON QUIXOTE. 75c.
TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM. Arthur. Small 12mo. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES FROM 1837–56. $1.50.
PERSONAL LIFE OF DAVID LIVINGSTONE. W. G. Blaikie, D.D., L.L.D. Port. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN. Jenkins. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
SANTA CLAUS. His friends St. Nicholas and Kriss Kringle. 3 vols. in one. Gold stamp on back and side. 75c.
VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. Goldsmith. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
FLOWERS FROM FAIRY-LAND. By A. Smith. 80 illus. Gold stamp on back and side. 75c.
FAMOUS STORIES BY THACKERAY, HAWTHORNE, ETC. Illus. Gold stamp on back and sides. 72c.
RUSSIAN FAIRY TALES. By W. R. S. Ralston, M.A. Gold stamp back and sides. 75c.
MOORE'S POETICAL WORKS. With notes Gold stamp on back. 75c.
MILTON'S POETICAL WORKS. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF ELIZA COOK. 75c.
ADVENTURES OF AN ATOM. Gilt back and side. $1.25.
OUR MUTUAL FRIEND. Dickens. Gold stamp on back and side. 75c.
GRIMMS'S FAIRY TALES. Illus. 75c.
HISTORY OF AUSTRALIA. Sidney. Illus. 75c.
THE CEDARS—MORE OF CHILD LIFE. By Ellis Gray. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA. Illus. Gold stamp on back. 75c.
COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR IN THE U. S. WITH PORTRAITS OF GENERALS. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
HISTORY OF GREECE. Keightly. 85c.
HISTORY OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. Including lives of Napoleon the Great, Louis Napoleon, and Prince Imperial. Gilt back. 75c.
PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIFE OF DANIEL WEBSTER. Including most of his great speeches. 2 vols. in one. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE OF ANDREW JACKSON. By Walker. Port. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE AND TIMES OF THOMAS JEFFERSON. Schmucker. Port. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Holley. Gilt back. 85c.
LIFE OF COL. JOHN C. FREMONT AND HIS NARRATIV OF EXPLORATIONS AND ADVENTURES. With memoir by Schmucker. Gilt back. 75c.
AMERICAN PATRIOTISM. Speeches, letters, etc., compiled by Peabody. 60c.
THE DANITES AND OTHER CHOICE SELECTIONS. Joaquin Miller. Gilt back and side. 60c.
A GOOD FIGHT AND OTHER STORIES. Illus. Gilt back. 60c.
LIFE OF GEORGE IV. By Banvard. Gilt back. 75c.
POETICAL WORKS OF OWEN MEREDITH. G.e. Elaborate design in gilt on b'k and side. $1
POETICAL WORKS OF MRS. HEMANS. Memoir. G.e. Gold stamp back and side. $1.
CLEVER JACK AND OTHER TALES. By Anne Boman. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
JACK SHEPARD. A Romance. By Ainsworth. Gold stamp on back and side. $1.
LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF HAJJI-BABA. Edited by J. Morier. Gold stamp on back. 85c.
COUNT SILVIUS. A Romance from the German. By M. J. Safford. Gold stamp back and side. 60c.
OUTRE-MER. A Pilgrimage beyond the Sea, By Longfellow. 60c.
JOURNEY OF DISCOVERY ALL AROUND OUR HOUSE. Companion volume to Inquire Within Upon Everything. 60c.
BOOK OF SCOTTISH ANECDOTE. Humorous, Social, Legendary, and Historical. $1.25.
PLYMOUTH CHURCH. Its Pastor and His Accusers. Doyle. Portraits. Gilt back and side. $1.
WILD SCENES AND WILD HUNTERS. Romance of Sporting. Gilt back and side. $1.10.
IN THE CAMARGUE. Gold stamp on back. 60c.
PUBLIC AND PARLOR READINGS in Prose and Poetry. Munroe. $1.35.
BRIEF BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. Hole and Wheeler. $1.10.
SWABIAN STORIES. By Theodore Tilton. Gilt top and back. $1.50.
FREEMASON'S MONITOR. By Z. A. Davis. Port. of Jas. Page. Gold stamp on side. 85c.
FREEMASON'S MANUAL. J. How. Illus. 85c.
HOME COMFORTS, OR THINGS WORTH KNOWING. $1.
TAINE'S HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. Trans. by Van Laun. 2 vols. gilt b'k. $3.50.
COMMON SENSE IN BUSINESS. $1.10.
CORRESPONDENCE AND CONVERSATIONS OF ALEXIS DE TOCQUEVILLE with Nassau William, Sr. 2 vols. Gilt back and side. $2.75.
OUR BOYS in the Army of the Potomac. Gilt back. $1.
LIFE AND MILITARY CAREER OF JEFFERSON DAVIS AND STONEWALL JACKSON. Steel engravings of each. $1.
WHITE AND BLACK. The outcome of a visit to the U. S. By G. Campbell. $1.
WILD WHITE CATTLE OF GREAT BRITAIN. By late Rev. John Storer, M.A. Gilt back and side. $1.
BLUE AND RED LIGHT, OR LIGHT AS MEDICIN. S. Pancoast Gilt back and side. 60c.
ENGLISH ECHOES OF GERMAN SONG. With 12 steel engs. Trans. by Dr. R. E. Wallace, Dr. J. D. Morrell, and F. D'Anvers. G.e. Gilt side and back. $1.25.
HOME SCENES DURING THE REBELLION. Strebor. Gilt side. 75c.
BOOK OF BEAUTY, A souvenir. 8 steel engs. G.e. Gold stamp b'k and side. 4to. 75c.
TREASURY OF ENGLISH SONNETS. Ed. by David M. Main. 12mo. 470pp. $1.75.
AMERICAN FARMER'S HANDBOOK. 400 engs. $2.50.
LIFE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH. By Agnes Strickland. $1.75.
CELEBRATED SPEECHES OF CHATHAM, BURKE, AND ERSKINE. $1.65.
PUBLIC ADDRESSES OF JOHN BRIGHT, M.P. Ed. by J. E. T. Rogers. Gilt b'k. $1.25.
LIFE AND WRITINGS OF LORENZO DOW. $1.25.
DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Reid. $1.

Odds and Ends.

ST. PETER: Who are you? Shades: Ex-receivers of the West Shore Railway. St. Peter: How did you happen to die? Shades: We were next appointed receivers for the earth, and claimed the solar system as our salary.

"MAMMA," said a little four-year-old boy, "what do de angels do w'en dey git tired of flyin'?" "Oh, I don't know, Willie. I suppose they sit down and rest." "I dess I dot you dere, mamma. De angels ain't dot nothing to set on, 'cept de back of der necks!"

DE STORY OB DE GAWDEN.

[As sung by de Coontown Glee Club, accompanied by de music ob de jewshawp an' de bones.]

At fus' w'en dis ole earf war made,
Dar warn't nary pusson
To do the oberseein' an'
De bossin' an' de fussin.'
De Lawd went huntin' roun' a spell
Fer truck to make a fellah,
An' whar de hogs had rooted roun'
He foun' de dirt war mellah.

(Cho'us.)

Oh, lookee out dar! Oh, lookee out, chilluns!
Jis' mine now w'at I say,
De debbil am boun' to tote yo' off
Afoah de broke o' day.
Den lookee out dar! Oh, lookee out, chilluns!
Oh, lookee out dar! Oh, lookee out, chilluns!
Oh, lookee out dar! Oh, lookee out, chilluns!
Till the debbil am gone away.

Den de Lawd made Adam outen mud
An' used up all de daubin'
But Adam went a mopin' roun'
A-poutin' an' a sobbin'.
An' so de Lawd tuk pity on
Dat berry lonesome gawdner,
An' tole him, if he'd stop his fuss,
He'd fix him up a pawdner.

(Cho'us de same.)

So den, w'en Adam war asleep
An' snoring like a snoozer,
Dey took a rib an' made his wife,
An' tole him not to 'buse her.
Den Ebe an' Adam spooned aroun',
A-makin' lub togedder,
An' dough dey had no ap'uns on,
Dey didn't mine de wedder.

(Cho'us like de fus'.)

De Lawd, he planted out some truck
Down on the fawm in Eden,
An' put dat Adam dar to wuk,
A-hoein' and a-weedin'.
But Ebe she war not satisfied,
An' t'ot she'd lots o' bodder,
Wid nuffin in de worl' to do
But cook a' eat de fodder.

(Cho'us anuddah time.) —

De debbil said, if dey would eat
Ob de 'Simmon-Tree ob Knowledge,
De bofe 'ud be so pow'ful smawt
Jis like dey'd been to college.
So Ebe, she went a meddlin' roun'
Jis like all other wimmens,
A-longin' an' a-hankerin'
To tas'e ob dem p'simmons.

('Peat dat cho'us.)

Den Satan gib to Ebe a tas'e
To proobe de froot wa'nt pizen,
De way dat woman eat de froot,
I tole you, war surprizin'!
To see de debbil a-cou'tin' Ebe
Made Adam berry je'lous,
An' so he sat an' eyed 'em bofe
A-sighin' like a bellus!

(Cho'us agin.)

At fus' Ebe tuk a leetle bite,
Jis like 'twar good fo' nuffin',
But aftah dat she jis kep' on
A-stuffin' an' a-stuffin'.
An' Ebe an' Satan sot an' eat,
A-huggin' an' a-bussin',
Wid Adam, 'hind de tater hole,
A-swarin' an' a-cussin!

(Sing dat cho'us.)

Ebe gib some froot to Adam, too,
Jis fo' to keep him quiet,
An' diden' hab to cosx him much
To git him fo' to try it.
But w'en dem folks had dun an' gone
Into dis diserbeyment,
Right all to onct dey noticed dat
Dey's raddah skase o' raiment.

(Cho'us some mo'.)

Dey bofe were den so dreffal shamed
Dey skipt down in the holler,
An' Adam, quick as he could dress,
Put on a paper collar.
But Ebe, she blushed, an' went to work
An' made de fig-leabes rus'le,
An' in a berry leetle time
She made herse'f a bus'le.

(Doan' lef' out dat cho'us.)

De Lawd, he diden' like de fit
Ob dem 'ar home-made ga'ments,
But made 'em breeches out de skins
Ob coons and odder va'ments.
And den, bekaze dey diserbeyed,
He wudent grant 'em pawdon,
But sent de sheriff, Jerry Bim,
An' kicked 'em out de gawden!

(Go ober dat cho'us.)

Now all you folkses, wite an' brack,
Dat lise'ns to dis story
Mus' mine de traps an' keep de track,
Er nebber get to glory.
For Satan am a sneakin' roun'—
Jis all you folks take wa'nin',
An' lock de do', an' bolt it fas',
Till 'arly in de mawnin'.

(Shout dat cho'us.)

Our Christian friends are at liberty to compose music for the above to suit themselvs, and use it as a sacred song for the instruction of the brethren and the glory of God. WATSON HESTON.